Blackwood, Thomas Bullivan, with their wives and children. With them were a number of invited guests and these were joined later in the day by others who came in private carriages. The noonday feast was spread under the wide-spreading branches of a magnificent oak. This oak also became the balance of the day and was the center of attraction. Some of the parties went fishing, but caught only "chiggers." The return was made early in the evening and each one felt better for the outing.

Tiver has made it difficult to buy prints for prompt delivery and many other lines related by print cloths are expected to advance. Stocks are being gradually depleted vance. Stocks are being gradually depleted vance. Stocks are being gradually depleted and the market is thought to be quite barren of goods in first hands.

Trade with local dry goods houses has been rather quist, but probably no more say than would naturally be expected for the first week in August. Jobbers have been making use of the opportunity to rush out their fall advance orders, and they have less friends for the Omahan market. But while trade was quiet last week an improvement is locked for this coming week. The usual reduction in railroad farces for the benefit of merchants expecting to come to omake and lay in their fall stocks. Jobbers have made preparations for an enormous house trade and expect as big an increase over last year as they have made in their savance orders.

few slaing up orders, but they are not large. Their time is being taken up shipping their advance orders, of which they have a dise assortment. Rubber goods are also being shipped to some extent. In a short time jobbers expect full buying to begin again and they look for a good trade. Merchants have sold out their summer lines in fairly good shape so that they should be well prepared to stock up freely in fail lines.

Not much business is expected in rubber goods until after cold weather breaks the stocks now in the hands of retailers. So many of them carried over considerable stock from the previous season and those who did not bought their supplies before the advances went into effect last appring that it is not reasonable to look for much buying until anow and cold weather set in.
