No Feminine Interest Has Been Neglected in September Designer.

CHARMING LOVE STORY FOR THE ROMANTIC

August Outing Continues Its Summer Atmosphere—'Surre' is Another 'Chimie Fadden' Book.

No feminine interest has been neglected in the September Designer. There is a charming love story, 'The Governor's Coup d'Etat,' for the romantic; 'Two Girl Camera Gunners on Camp Cod,' for the nature lover; a shadow pantomime, 'Ariette and Orabelle,' for the amateur actor, and 'Hardanger Embroidery,' 'Bernuda Fagotik,' 'Treaty Trains for the Lace Maker' and 'Modern Use for Old-Time Stitches,' for the fancy worker. Practical and valuable are 'The Evolution of Green Help Into Competent Servants' and 'When the School Bell Rings,' the latter illustrating and describing comfortable and stylish garments for the schoolboy and girl. Autumn fashions are given in this issue in abundance, and the millinery designs are chosen with especial reference to the season. The making of the new jacket with waistcoat is 'Indy' described in 'Points on Dressmaking,' a thoroughly up-to-date department in the Designer which keeps its readers in touch with all the latest sartorial wrinkles. Those in search of novelties in the entertainment line will appreciate Rosalie Dawson's suggestions for 'A Radiant Party' and 'Canning and Preserving,' by Mary Taylor-Ross, will assist the domestic chef in preparing sweets for winter use. 'Toilet Table Chat' and 'Stiquette Hints' are two other departments in the Designer which are of unusual interest this month.

S. R. Crockett's 'The Adventurer in Spain' is not yet well known here in the middle west and the people are losing one of the greatest literary events of recent years. The author, known in the world over for his character delineation, the charm of his well-woven narrative, and his insight into those things which lie nearest the heart of humanity, has never given us anything quite so good as this simply told tale of his travels and the people he met during his residence in Spain. His story is laid, not in the 'heated cities of the south, but in the wild, mountainous country of the north, along the French border, where still live many who call Carlos King. His story is a tale of Spanish chivalry, of Spanish villainy, the quiet life of the mountaineers, is interwoven with pictures of the social life of modern Spain, up among the mountains where the things of the outer world seldom come to trouble. A little love story of two minor characters is the only concession to Cupid, but there is a fascinating story of a mother's love and how it brought peace. Probably the most charming thing in the whole book of charming things is the picture of the old bishop of Elveto, whose simplicity and beauty of life, quiet self-effacement and unselfish devotion to his people, causes the hardy Scottish Presbyterian to do reverence. The underlying charm of the book is that it is all drawn from the author's own experiences, illustrated by photographs taken by himself, and, in many instances, with only the name changed.

August Outing continues its summery atmosphere, featuring an article by the late Leonidas Hubbard, Jr., under the alluring title, 'Paddling Your Own Canoe.' Mr. Whitney presents the first of his papers on South American Life, 'On the Trail of the Jaguar,' with numerous pictures. A striking and unconventional article is 'A Woman on the Trail,' by Rena A. Phillips, with novel pictures by the author, showing how attractive women can look and still be fitted for the experiences of life in the woods. Fiction of the outdoor variety is well represented, also fishing and fish stories. All the regular departments are brimming full of summer life and ozone.

'Surre' is another 'Chimie Fadden' book from the press of Dodd, Mead & Co., Inc. a continuation of the little adventures of the Bowery boy, the French maid and the other characters we met long ago in Chimie Fadden. Some of his letters to his father are delicious. For those who can digest Bowery slang it is an easy book to read in a hammock on a hot afternoon.

'One Done Good' by Edward B. Lent, Brooklyn Eagle writer, consists of the author's comments regarding the different treatments he took for rheumatism. This doesn't sound funny, but the book is. In fact, the comical way he treats the treatments would make you believe it was someone else's rheumatism he was talking about. And he took all the known methods of getting rid of it, from blisters to clairvoyance. He still has the rheumatism.

'The Court of Sacharissa,' a midsummer idyll compiled out of the traditions of the irresponsible club, as say the authors, Meara Sheringham and Maskin. There are six members to the club, and wandering out of London in search of adventure, they come upon the Court of Sacharissa, a beautiful garden of flowers, and upon Sacharissa herself. Four of the club are more irresponsible than the other two, and their 'doings' lead to many adventures. Published by the Macmillan company.

'Addresses and Presidential Messages of Theodore Roosevelt, 1897-1904,' with an introduction by Henry Cabot Lodge. In this work are brought together a number of important messages and speeches expressing the president's opinion on subjects with which he has felt it his duty to doal. These speeches by one who fills the highest place in the gift of the American people, a man of the highest education, the sincerity of whose honest, fearless utterances are never questioned, will form a valuable contribution to the history of today. The selections have been made under President Roosevelt's supervision, and the whole forms a very attractive volume. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

'Extracts from Adam's Diary,' by Mark Twain (Harper Bros.), is tinged with all Mr. Clemens' clever humor. He has done better work, but he has done worse. It purports to be Adam's first impressions of Eve, their life in the garden and the arrival of Cain and Abel. It's worth both the time and the money.

'A Daughter of Dale,' by Emerson J. Taylor (The Century company), is a story of a university town, and some of the dangers which may hurt a young man's life if he forgets the real end of true education and devotes himself entirely to the means. The characters are well drawn, plenty of incident is given, and the love story turns out right, as it should. The story of young ambitions and young life cannot but hold the interest of its readers.
