Statement of the Owner. When seen at the fire Mr. Huntington, resident of the bedding company, said: "We closed today at 12 o'clock and the only motive power we have is an electric motor. The building was vacated at noon and the fire started at 2:45 p. m. We had a force of eight mattress makers, four sewing girls, one driver and three in the office and have been doing a nice business. We had just started on a government contract calling for 1,900 beds. We have been in business here for nine years."

The building occupied by the Omaha Bedding company was of frame construction, 40x100 feet, and three stories in height. It was stocked with just such material as would facilitate the progress of a fire, and although the fire department responded with all possible haste, the firemen battled against odds. The heat was intense and at times it required great effort on the part of the fire fikhters to face the blaze.

A little incident occurred at the fire that is worthy of mention. Although in tears over the loss of his business, Mr. Huntington was solicitous as to the safety of the four sewing machines owned by the girls employed by him. As he explained, the machines were the personal property of the girls and they had no insurance on them. As it happened, they were in the south end of the building and were saved, al-
