Farewell Sermon at Hillside Congregational Church is Unexpectably Mild.

NO REFERENCE MADE TO LATE TROUBLES

Members of Church Express Pleasure That Retiring Pastor Takes the Course He Did on His Last Appearance.

Those members of the Hillside Congregational church, Thirtieth and Ohio streets, who expected the retiring pastor, Rev. W. Francis Berger, to make any sensational references in his farewell sermon last night to the long-standing controversy within the church which has ultimately led to his departure, left the church disappointed, or at least surprised.

Instead of his sermon being full of fireworks, it was like a calm after a storm. Rev. Mr. Berger took for his text "Behold, I send the Lamb of God," and his discourse was on the life of Jesus; a talk for the brotherhood of man; a plea for truth. He pictured minutely the sufferings undergone by Jesus for the elevation of mankind.

"This board is of the opinion that entirely too much slugging is going on for the few men apprehended. You men have got to get out and arrest these men who are disturbing the peace. It must be done and you cannot do it, unless you will see that it secures men who will. Another thing, this congregating of strikers on the streets must stop. You police must disperse crowds. Make arrests. Get every man who creates a disturbance. This is the only way to put a stop to these nightly disturbances."

"I came here," said Mr. Fitzpatrick, "to look over your situation in order that I may report when I return to Chicago. I find that you men here are well organized and that you will continue the strike as long as the packers refuse to accede to your demands. In the past the employers have tried to take advantage of us. They have tried to keep us separated and prevent us from organizing a grand association. By keeping us separated the packers managed to hold the whiphand over the workers and compel them to work for any wages offered. Again the packers have tried to keep us separated by bringing in the nationality question and causing strife between the various nationalities in the plants."

"With the superb organization of skilled labor the unskilled men have been left in and we produce the goods for them. By doing this skilled labor will raise the general standard of labor. We might go along with the unskilled labor unions for an indefinite period without doing any great good or advancing the general cause of labor, but with the unskilled labor and the skilled union we will stand together for mutual protection."

"All workers," declared Mr. Fitzpatrick, "must understand that all that stands between us and our goal is the competition among wage earners. Our employers have been able to meet this competition by forming trusts and as soon as we form a trust we will have the best of the situation. We have a commodity to sell that is our own and if the corporations want it they must come to us and pay the price we ask. We have our labor to sell and in order to protect ourselves we should stand together and sell it to the best possible advantage. Heretofore the employers have held the right to put a price on labor before they bought it. Now we will change this and charge the price. If the employers want our services at the prices we demand all right, if not they can leave us alone. This is a right that we have and we do not want to forfeit it."

Vail Takes the Stand. Vice President Vail also addressed the meeting. He said that he had been working for a material change in the strike situation. He admitted that during those two weeks the packers had induced three union men to return to work. Inducements had been offered to many others, but the offers had been declined. "We will not go back to work," said Mr. Vail, "until we can get an honorable settlement. The packers tell each day about the amount of work being done and we will save it only the people were willing that he should."

They have not tried to join the church. Their judgment is all right, but they have overcome their will. Man can do anything that he wills to do."
