Millers Are Accumulating Wheat - Prospects for Lighter Receipts. PRICES STUBBORNLY RESIST BEAR ATTACKS

Wheat and Corn Both Close Fractionally Higher - Wheat Received of Poor Quality - Brokers' Views - Financial Gossip.

It has long been the fashionable thing for the bears to grow especially vicious during October and winter months. Under conditions facing the wheat trade that is presented for some time, namely, a shortage of crop for some time, namely, export as well as nearly all other export, the market is not likely to be short of wheat, while a much larger percentage of the wheat received is of such quality that but little of it will be mustered as contract stuff. Chicago today does not receive a single car of wheat good enough to break prices, but it has been receiving considerable wheat during the past six days, and while that delivered on day, it is of a better quality than that received on the day before. The receipts in the northwest have been large, and on this there has been considerable talk to break prices, but it is generally understood that the competition between millers for wheat has become so intense that every miller has been made to draw country supplies to the market, and it is not likely that any time when the receipts will drop off. Baltimore exporters are anxious for wheat and they are also in the market. Duluth sends out a report that 7,000,000 bushels of wheat have been sold there in the last few days. The truth of the theory of high prices being due to inducements for immediate shipment is growing stronger every day. Millers are unable to get wheat for grinding without drawing on stocks in store, and they are paying handsome prices for it. A number of reports are being received from export, 10,000 barrels of flour, loads for 50 cents, and from every quarter the necessity of securing wheat at new prices is being impressed upon millers and exporters. The market is not likely to be broken, and it is starting that October wheat will be readily secured at the present prices. The market is starting that October wheat will be readily secured at the present prices. The market is starting that October wheat will be readily secured at the present prices.
