AT THE PLAYHOUSES

"Shore Acres" at the Krug. James A. Herne surely knew how to play on the human heart, and when he wrote "Shore Acres" he touched every key on the manual and pulled most of the stops wide open. The result is a very diapason that rises in a swelling wave of "heart interest" and compels attention of even the world-calloused. It is really beautiful in its simplicity and will doubtless be a popular favorite long after more pretentious and probably better plays have been forgotten. And this just because it does arouse the better sentiments of human nature.

The company now playing this pastoral at the Krug theater is well calculated to bring out its beauties, and gives effective interpretation to the plot. James T. A. W. Miltimore of Shelbina, Mo., a salesman in that state for a wholesale candy manufacturing concern, had some interesting observations to make yesterday touching the surprising outcome of the voting in Missouri on Tuesday, "Mr. Folk's election surprised no one," he said, "but if any man had offered to bet that a legislature could be elected in Missouri to beat General Francis M. Cockrell for the United States senate after he had been indorsed for the position by the state democratic convention that nominated Folk, that man would have been considered insane. Senator Cockrell has been the idol of rural Missouri ever since the war, and the election of a republican legislature cannot be considered in any sense a reflection on him. President Roosevelt's aggressive honesty of character, his militant spirit, the good times and good prices, coupled with Folk's sweeping fight on the rottenness in council and in legislature, appealed to even the rock-ribbed old. confederates so forcibly that the United States senatorship and all else was simply forgotten in the grim and ruthless determination to clean out everything and everybody in the state house at Jefferson City that had the remotest connection with the crookedness that was proven and sus-

Outside of Senator Cockrell's defeat the new deal in Missouri will probably result in much good to the state. It will at least wipe out in the average northern mind the notion that the fifth state in the union is so wedded to its idols as to be unduly prejudiced and hopelessity nonprogressive. Settlers and farm buyers from the north have been steadily moreasing, too, in the state, and the result of Tuesday's voting will undoubtedly bring many more. Missourians do not doubt that the regulican legislature, will premptly and emphatically back up Mr. Folk in any legitimate and worthy measure of reform he may pro-

Fire and Police Commissioners Hold a Long Session.

SHANAHAN'S SALOON STAYS CLOSED

Penalty for Permitting a Fight in His Place is Enforced Against Keeper to Extent of Suspending License.

At the meeting of the fire and police commissioners last night John Shanahan was brought on the carpet for permitting a fight to go on in his saloon on the night of November 5. George Johnson testified that he was thrown down and trampeled on by Shanahan and others because he expressed his political views in the saloon. Several witnesses were examined and the board decided to keep the Shanahan saloon closed until November 15.

Member Nixon introduced a motion which carried, instructing the secretary of the board to look up the ordinances governing the rate of speed the street cars run inside the city limits. Nixon declared that the cars run entirely too fast and he wants the rate of speed cut down to about four miles an hour. The board talked a little while about the motion and then voted in favor of the investigation. Bergquist said that if the cars were running too fast policemen could stop the cars and place the train crew under arrest.

As West Q street is constantly traveled and is into the city there seems to be no opposi tion to having this paving done. Members of the council have practically agreed to take the matter up during the winter and arrange the necessary ordinances so that work on the paving may be commenced in the spring. The city limits on the west extend to within about 200 feet of the Burlington tracks. Portions of the road are impassable at times and property owners and those who use the road a great deal are anxious that something be done to improve the present condition of the street
