John Morley Praises Frederic Harrison's Remarkable Novel, "Theephano."

MISS JORDAN'S STORY INTERESTS GIRLS

Feature of the December Smart Set is Undoubtedly the Novelette "Clavering and His Daughter."

graced Harrison's remarkable novel Theophano: the Crusade of the Tenth Century," published by Harpers, has called forth the unusual honor of a review h John Morley in the Nineteenth Century Mr. Morley's opinion of some other becks must be surmised from what he says about "Theophano." "Mr. Marrison is a recognized. master of language . . . direct, powerful, plain, with none of our latter-day consense of mincing and posturing. He has the signal merit of looking his readers in the eye." Again he says; "Mr. Harrison's book, with no deliberate intention of his, for he is here a writer of neutral history, will give people of a reflective turn of mind, whether Jew, Mahometan, Christian or agnostic, if they be in the humor, many deep things to ruminate upon. . . . A fine panorama of the long secular strife between east and west, between Islam and the two mutually infurlated forms of Christian faith."

Miss Elizabeth Jordan is receiving many letters from girls concerning her new convent story, "May Iverson-Her Book," which appeared serially in Harper's Magazine, and is now out in book form. Convent girls are well represented in the correspondence, but the book seems to have equally interested girls in boarding schools from Maine to California. One of them writes that only a single copy of Harper's Magazine is taken by her school library, and that every month there has been a struggle among the students for first chance to read the adventures of May Iverson. The favorite chapter of the book seems to be "First Aid to Kittle James," a tale of examination which strikes a responsive chord in every school girl's heart.

The feature of the December Smart Set is undoubtedly the novelette, "Clavering and his daughter," a story of Washington life, by a new author, Foxcroft Davis, whose meteoric entrance into the field of fiction is likely to be the sensation of the season. Totally unknown, this writer's first manuscript was not only accepted on sight by one of the most conservative publishing houses in America. but two new books were contracted for to form a series of three, all on the national politics and society centering at Washington. Meanwhile the Smart Set has secured the first work to be published under the name of Foxcroft Davis-a story of a remarkable man and a remarkable woman in the interesting setting of life at the nation's capital, which no author has yet known so intimately and vitally. The appearance of this story is an event.

Much interest is attached to the publication by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. of "The Reaper." by Edith Rickert, for it opens a new field to the novel reader, and introduces to the American public an author who has gained a large circle of readers in England within the last year. Miss Rickert is an American, a graduate of Vassar, but, like the Baroness von Hutton she has taken up her residence abroad, and her reputation in this country has been limited to the circle of readers of the Chicago Record-Herald and New York Evening Post, to which papers she has contributed from time to time. In this novel she has produced a powerful story of the Shetland islands, thoroughly imbued with the austere glamour of the northern seas and recalling in its style and handling Hall Caine's earlier works, "The Deemster" and "The Manxman." It is a strong and compelling novel, depicting a wonderful devo-

Lovers of wise and witty essays find unfailing diversion in Miss Repplier's books. They belong to the literature of entertainment. Her latest book "Compromises," which Houghton, Mifflin & Co. publish, has all the charm of gayety, bantering humor, felicitous quotation and flashing jeux d'esprit which have made her essays a stimulus and a delight. The title of her first essay she takes from DeQuincey's phrase "The Luxury of Conversation," and she defends in her incomparably clever fashion the earlier essayist's dictum that "it does not depend upon one or two able talkers." The titles of other chapters will give some bint of the wide range of subjects that she sweeps and the manner in which she touches them: The Gayety of Life, Marriage in Fiction, Our Belief in Books, The Spinster, The Tourist, Allegra.

Miss Georgiana Goddard King's "Comedies and Legends for Marionettes" has special timeliness just now because marionettes are the new fad for children. Her book tells how to make a marionette theater and also how to make the marionettes, followed by three comedies, two legends and two pantomimes for the children who work the marionettes to perform. A large number of pictures, diagrams and drawings by Miss Anna R. Giles show just how each scene look, and how the marionettes are

The lists of "best sellers" published in The Bookman show the steady, gradual, but sure rise of "The Custaway" in popular favor. On the July list it stood fourth; in August it was third; in September it stepped into second place. It blds fair to give "The Crossing" a tussic for first place before Christmas. This is the more sixaificant of the growing popularity of Miss Rive's novels when it is remembered that, ualike some of her other books, "The Castaway" was published without noise and has received no "booming." "The Castaway" was published by Bobbs-Merrill company.

"The Truants" is an exciting tale of London life by A. E. W. Mason, the English authoress whose pen produced "Four Feathers," a book of unusual popularity. The story deals with a young man who leaves his wife and home to seek fame and fortune in Africa. On the eve of success Le is forced to choose between his own a sgrace or that of his wife, who during his assence has become entangled in the net or an adventurer. There is a touch of mystery which sustains the interest to the last hapter. Published by Harpers.

The most suggestive of recent contribu tions to pedagogical literature on arithmetic is a monograph entitled "The Outlook for Arithmetic in America." by David Rugene Smith. Ginn & Co. offer to send this pamphlet postpaid to any address on
