Sylvan Belote, the victim, with a brother and three other boys, were returning home from school and met the Linn boy, who had a gun and who had been hunting. The five walked along some distance together, when one of the party placed a tin can on the head of Sylvan and invited the Linn boy to shoot it off. The Belote boy turned his back to the shooter and Linn stepped back about twenty feet and fired, missing the can and striking the boy. He told the story to the coroner's jury and thought his ization that has won renown on the field had aim was due to the shot scattering, an
