COLD DELAYS THE TRAINS

Railways Operate with Great Caution During the Present Severe Weather.

Despite the fact that there is not much snow, trains from every direction are very late reaching Omaha and few of them are making any pretensions at running on schedule time. The fault is not with the snow, but with the cold. Wheels will not take hold of the rails and it is hard to keep up steam. Oil congeals, and this is another drawback. At every station of any importance a thorough and careful investigation is made of the passenger trains from end to end, and this causes delay. Machinery does not work so well and there are other things of apparently minor importance that are operating against the running of trains on schedule time.
