SOME GRAFT IN DAMAGE SUITS

Railroad Detectives Run Down Professional Work in Personal Injury Cases.

The chief detective of a great southern railway system had adjourned to the smoking compartment of the Pullman for a final cigar before he climbed into his upper berth. He had just finished a job of clever sleuthing and was in a talkative mood, which quickly brought the half dozen other smokers to attention.

"I suppose in the beginning I was supplied with as much confidence in human nature as the average man," he began, as he settled back into the cushions and put his feet on a chair. "But after spending twenty years in finding out just how much the truth is stretched every time somebody asks the company for damages for personal injuries there isn't much left of it."

"I hadn't been wearing railroad gumshoes very long before I was turned loose on a case where a 16-year-old boy wanted $100,000 damages because he was deaf and dumb as the result of a railroad wreck."

"I worked on the case for two years, during which time the suit was postponed from one term of court to another, until finally it had to be tried. The sum total of all my knowledge was that the boy hadn't spoken nor apparently heard a word for two years.

"On the morning of the trial I advised the company's lawyer to settle for $5,000, which they offered to do. The plaintiff's counsel refused the offer, so the case was called."

"The evidence was so completely one-sided that the case would certainly have been finished and gone to the jury before night, but at noon I had an idea. I thought that if we had one more day something might turn up to aid us. I conferred with the company's lawyers, and at about the hour when the case was ready for the jury our leading attorney was taken suddenly ill. The judge had no alternative but to adjourn court until the next day."

"That night I went to the plaintiff's counsel and explained that we were ready to settle, but wanted to make a physical examination of the boy first. He had no objections, so we rented a room in the local hospital and took the boy there."

"We put him upon an operating table around which were gathered four white-coated, white-whiskered men, alleged to be eminent surgeons, but in reality the company's lawyers."

"After baring the youth's bosom over the heart, the chief surgeon grabbed an ugly looking knife and solemnly said:

"Brethren, there is just about one chance in a hundred that the patient will survive this operation. Are you willing to take the chance?"

"We are," answered the others.

"The words were hardly spoken before the boy let out a yell and cried, 'For God's sake don't kill me!'"

"Then he snapped his jaws together and became dumb again, but the few words he had said were mighty costly for him, for his lawyer immediately threw up the sponge and asked for the dismissal of the case the next morning."

"Then the detective lighted his cigar and remarked that he always had more trouble getting the truth out of a woman than a man."

"A few years ago a Buffalo woman, who was known to us as a member of a fake injury syndicate, put in a claim for $50,000 against us for alleged paralysis of all her limbs," continued the detective. "She pretended that her spine had been jerked out of kilter in a little one-horse wreck down in Tennessee."

"I was positive that the woman was as sound as a dollar, but I couldn't prove it. So I had to move to Buffalo and camp on her trail. Finally I managed to strike up an acquaintance with another woman who was on very intimate terms with the supposed paralyzed one."

"I professed to be a member of a band of personal injury grafters out in Chicago, of whom she knew something, and I showed such an extensive knowledge of the gang that she believed me. Of course, she wanted me to meet her friend the paralyzed one the first thing, and I was for it strong."

"She gave me a very effusive letter of introduction, and I started out on the war-path. When I found the woman I wanted she was propped up in bed, and was certainly doing the helpless act to perfection. When I sprung the letter she warfled up, and we were soon merrily discussing our experiences in taking various kinds of falls out of railroad treasuries."

"When I arose to go I suggested that her friends in Chicago might like to read a little 'not from her,' which I would be pleased to deliver within a couple of days. Never suspecting for a moment, she hopped jauntily out of bed and dashed off a few lines in no time."

"Then I sprung my detective badge on her and she suddenly became the most active woman I ever saw. She made a break for a gun, but I pulled first, and had her in a cell in less than an hour."

"She was arrested not long ago in Chicago for trying to 'lim-flam' another railroad."—New York Sun.

DEFENDS THE TIPPING SYSTEM

A Missourian Issues a Loud Talk Against the Proposed Legislation.

Dr. Alonzo Tubbs of Osage county, Missouri, who is now proposing to abolish the tipping system, will have to bring his lunch with him or wear a Sherlock Holmes disguise the next time he comes to St. Louis.

Charles Krempp, a waiter at the St. Nicholas hotel, St. Louis, who says he has spent half of a life in mastering the fine points of hotel service, yesterday gave out the following statement on the subject of tips, which the waiters and their patrons are discussing with equal interest:

"The waiter's salary does not amount to anything. The employer fixes the salary according to the amount of tips the waiter gets. In some places the proprietor even goes so far as to make his waiters pay him so much for each table they serve. These employers also make the waiters pay for breakage, give them food not fit for a dog, treat them like the commonest convicts, keep a man on his feet eighteen hours a day, have systems of checks for their own protection, keep bloodhounds and slave-drivers, like captains, and read waiters and dining room detectives to still further degrade the men. They also require the men to shave clean every day."

"In general, the waiter pays his 'omnibus' out of his earnings, also the pantry men, tips the cook and has in the plurality of houses to give up a large part of his tips to the captain who directs the customers to his table, and to the head waiter, upon whose mercy he is dependent. His laundry bills are higher than those of a lord, his shoes must be shined, his dress neat and clean; his aprons and ties are not furnished by the house, either. If you come to think that this man has to support a family, besides all these bloodsuckers, you can easily imagine how much he has left when the week is over."

"In France, Germany, Switzerland, Austria, etc., you have the government which thinks it its duty to look after the hotel and restaurant waiter. A waiter has got to have a training as piccolo for three years before he graduates as a waiter. Schools are conducted in which the waiter's profession is taught theoretically and practically. The scholar learns bookkeeping, carving, treating the wine, and the German, French and English languages. The school stands directly under the minister of education and schools, and an unsatisfactory result at school prevents any piccolo from graduation as a waiter."

"Europe knows what a jewel a well-conducted hotel is, and only a man who has passed all the degrees of service can become a manager there. To get a similar position in America all you have to do is to take as many shares in the company."

Mr. Krempp suggests as a means of abolishing tips that a waiter's commission of 10 per cent be added to the guest's check, or 5 per cent in family hotels and apartment houses. The guest would then know what was expected and the waiter would not have to be placed in the attitude of begging.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

DISSIPATED VITALITY REGAINED

Since the most vulnerable spot of the human system is the blood, it is also the one most readily assailed. Overtaxation, excesses and disorders sap the mainpring of life and produce breakdowns and chronic disease.
