

EGGS AS TABLE LUXURIES

While the Mercury Goes Down Prices of Estates Go Up.

EFFECT OF COLD WEATHER ON MARKETS

Only People with Millionaire Purves Can Afford to Invest in Fresh Country Produce at Present Figures.

Thirty-five cents wholesale! This is not diamonds or even hard coal. It is the present day price of a dozen of best grade domestic eggs.

There is no duty to make the egg the exclusive diet of the wealthy except the duty of the hen, which is being shirked this cold weather.

The supply of eggs of every sort and variety in Omaha is almost exhausted. The price, however, if the produce men may be believed, will go little if any higher. It can't. With the egg now costing the grocer practically 3 cents each, there are only a score or so people in town who have the ready money to invest in a whole dozen at any one time.

Other Effects of Cold Weather.

The cold weather has not alone stopped the local winter crop of eggs, but it has stopped the farmer from driving nine miles to market with those he has. So fresh eggs are in demand by Omaha dealers, but are hardly to be had because there are almost none in town.

Chicken meat is dear—it costs as much anyway as venison. The wholesale buying price is now 10 cents, whereas the usual winter price is 8 or 9 cents.

If anyone should come here and offer ordinary Port Arthur prices for cream, it is there that he would get the laugh. The creameries are paying 28 cents a pound for cream at the stations.

This is why butter is so scarce and hard to buy in the country. The farmers can't afford to make it when they can sell their cream. Good country butter when it finds its way into the city at all is sold by the grocers and others at 30 cents.

FRY'S SHOW WINDOW SMASHED

Runaway Team Dashes Across Sidewalk and Does Much Damage to Glass.

An exciting runaway occurred on Douglas street when a team of horses owned by the Nebraska Telephone company and in charge of A. D. Cooper broke away at Fourteenth and tore along the street until they reached the Fry shoe store, where they wrought destruction to the extent of $100.

When the horses reached Sixteenth street in their wild race west on Douglas they swerved to the right and into the large circular plate glass case, which was shattered. Several other panes of glass in front of the store were broken, while part of the window display of footwear was splattered with blood from the bleeding animals.

In their efforts to extricate themselves from the entrance of the shoe store into which they plunged, the horses scattered blood in every direction. The blood quickly froze to the shoes, sidewalk and front of the store, and with the broken glass and other evidences of violence, the scene suggested one of carnage.

The horses have been attended by a veterinary surgeon, and it is believed will be fit for service again.
