

SPIRITS LEAD HIM ASTRAY

Dr. Howes Decided Incompetent After Hearing Before Judge Vinsonhale.

UNLICENSED HEALER HAS HALLUCINATIONS

Children Taken from His Custody Because of His Inability to Properly Provide for or Manage Them.

Dr. Joel C. Howes of 2709 Grant street created excitement on the second floor of the county court house at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon by fainting outside the court room of Judge Vinsonhale. He had just been ordered as not fitted to have the care and custody of his two children, Homer, aged 18, and John, aged 6, Mrs. Jeanette Burkhalter of Grand Island, Neb., a relative, was named as guardian.

After the decision of the court there had been an affecting scene, the father, an old man, having held the little boy, Johnnie, in a tight embrace for a long time, while tears rained down his face. It was immediately after being separated from the little fellow by the oldest son that he stumbled out into the hallway, talking incoherently and fell in a fainting condition onto a bench.

The testimony of Homer Howes and of two past, or since his wife died, Dr. Howes has not been breadwinner, but he has the ability to support the children, that in fact the son Homer has been earning the living for the house, and that they have got along by the financial help of a brother of Mrs. Howes. What Homer complained of was not that he was compelled to earn the living for the three, but that the father is a spiritualist who has become so crochety that they could not longer put up with his abuse and the outcroppings of his peculiarities.

On the stand Dr. Howes said he had taken a six months' course in an Ohio electrical therapeutic college many years ago and had practiced that brand of healing. He had never secured a certificate to practice medicine in Nebraska. In a long explanation of his belief he confessed that for forty years he had been a spiritualist. He did not believe in actual communion with spirits, he said; believe was not strong enough—he knew. This statement he emphasized most forcibly.

One of his witnesses, a Mrs. Bidwell, who had kept house for him after his wife had died, gave him a good report, but at one point she burst out with a statement that she did not take any stock in Christianity, that she was not a Christian. She denied, however, that she was of the same belief as Dr. Howes.

Mr. Huff, a Mormon elder, was also a witness for the doctor, but he really knew nothing about the case, and said he thought he had been confused with someone else, although he had been at the Howes home at the time of the funeral of Mrs. Howes.

Several women who have known the family for a long time gave the oldest boy a good reputation and had nothing good to say for the father. It was pretty clearly shown that he is not capable of practicing his profession with profit. It is a question now what he will do. His only asset is a homestead which is being proved up at the expense of his brother-in-law.

Railroad Gets Restraining Order. Judge Sutton has issued an order restraining the county, until further order of the court, from restraining order from across the right-of-way of the Rock Island railroad. The road is specified as 1617, and the restraining order runs not only against the Board of County Commissioners, but also the road supervisors of the precincts wherein the proposed road is located. The road puts up a supersedeas bond for the sum of $10,000 pending final settlement of the dispute.

ON to Grand Island. An enthusiastic bunch of Count John A. Creighton's wearers of the white and blue went to Grand Island to be present at the state oratorical contest which takes place tonight. John Caynaugh represented Creighton university this year, and the boys are confident that he will win a creditable prize for the first time in his life. He has succeeded in landing first prize for the past three years, and has thus represented Nebraska in the interstate contests on those occasions.

No More Sidewalk Holidays. OMAHA, Feb. 14.—To the Editor of The Bee: It is not time to put a stop to the holding up the city for damages to pedestrians for slipping on sidewalks? The home owner is compelled first to put down a wooden walk for the convenience of pedestrians, then they steal a plank and burn it, and fall in the hole and the home owner to pay them. I have known a husband and wife, both with claims for damages for falling down, and they got damages, and had claims again the next winter. Then their sons started the same game, as it was so easy to make the city or home owner pay. Of course any lawyer is anxious to take the case on half—they generally get their half. After the wooden walks are all stolen the city orders permanent walks, and they slip down on them and commence suit for $5,000 damages. Now, what ground have they? What has the city to do with the elements? Is it the home owner, or he who is trying to pay for his little home, to be held responsible for the ice, snow and rain, and the effects of whiskey and beer? Comes a big snow-storm, if we let snow remain on the walks there would be no damages if it were so soft to fall in, but we are ordered to shovel it off of our cement walks to accommodate the pedestrians. Of course the walks are more slippery when clean, and it costs money to clean them, and we are asked to pay $5,000 every week to someone who has taken a little drop to much. Is there any justice in this? Is the home owner always to be held up in this way?

Our former city attorney advised to settle on these claims by giving them $200 or $300. The lawyer says that if that is what they started out for. Why, I think I will have to take a tumble myself to keep even and pay the tax. Would it not be better for the city to fight to the bitter end and ridicule any attempts to hold up the taxpayers with such unreasonable claims?

G. W. T. P. S.—All the people in Omaha at work night and day could not keep ice off sidewalks for the last six weeks, and when there is no frost there is no ice to fall on. I understand there is a city ordinance to hold the adjoining property. Request that ordinance at once, for that would be the last straw on the camel's back. I would subscribe to any unfortunate who got hurt on the sidewalks we paid so much for that they might walk on safely and pleasantly.

OUR LETTER BOX.

The Obstructionist Senate.

SUPERIOR, Neb., Feb. 15.—To the Editor of The Bee: The past few days in the senate of the United States seem to be ominous in their tendencies. I would not do the slightest wrong by word or thought to that venerable body of men, yet there have been times in the past when the country has been sorely tried by their acts; and they must not forget that while forbearance is one of the virtues of the American people, that forbearance at times has been sorely tried. Their attempt to discipline President McKinley during the Spanish-American war led to the severest criticisms from the people. Today the senate has placed itself across the pathway of higher civilization, and under the pretext of senatorial courtesy, a term that has become the laughing stock of the American people, attempts to thwart the president, as well as the people, in carrying this nation onward and upward in that spirit of advancement which has been inspired by the most exalted patriotism and carried forward by our progressive Americanism. They have detracted from the security of our nation by taking away the prestige we had gained by the advanced principles of arbitration.

President Roosevelt and Secretary Hay have been the vanguards of these great principles; they have never lost an opportunity to give that executive force and character that have been commensurate with the highest type of statesmanship. In the tribunal of The Hague they have shown themselves the master minds of the world and the peacemakers among all the civilized nations of the earth. These two great minds are beating in unison with the hearts and the intelligence of our country. Through the acts of President Roosevelt we can truthfully say: The conscience of the country is represented in the government of the country, both at home and abroad. He is building the ways of peace and not of war. He prefers the settlement of international disputes by arbitration and conference and not by gun and sword. No better proof of his desire for permanent peace could be had than the first stand McKinley took at the Hague. The chief object was to empower the president to submit differences for arbitration in his own way; and the especially desirable features were to safeguard our country against protracted wrangling with other nations, which so often precipitates wars or brings disgrace and dishonor.

The old adage, "A stitch in time saves nine," seems to be well understood by the president, and his observance will be appreciated by the people, the United States senate to the contrary notwithstanding. By compliance with the action of the senate the whole plan to advance international security and peace would be overthrown and the dangers of complications and differences with other nations would be broadened and deepened into chasms that might lead to conflicts and wars. Let the senate arise to the dignity of the situation—let them realize as do the whole masses of the people of the country, that the American people are in the whirl of great national events. That the wires are laid in a single night, as it were, and they are surcharged with electricity; there is no place for halting or even hesitating; we are on the line, and all of the conditions must be promptly and handled or we will be distanced in the race. President Roosevelt is a man of action; he is intelligent, safe and fearless; he stands between him and the public good; he is the only man on the line, and the people demand that the senate recede from its effete notions. Come out from the dogma of "governing the country by the senate, and for the senate." Take on the broad national character that has come to become the president's, and the same grace that becomes the president's, and the same grace that then we can feel that while the senate undoubtedly has the power to amend and reject, that it will use that power in a way that will not be inimical with the best interests of the public good.
