

GASOLINE MOTOR CAR READY

Union Pacific Experiment in Rapid Transit for Suburban Lines.

WILL MARK AN EPOCH IN RAILROADING

Big Machine in Small Space Designed to Carry Light Traffic Across Country at Tremendous Speed.

Confined in width to the standard gauge of track, which is but four feet eight and one-half inches, is a self-regulated, perfectly balanced, 100-horse power six-cylinder gasoline engine, with all its accompanying mechanism; an independent acetylene gas plant and lighting generator, with full equipment of the latest design water heating system, with a full network of pipes and connections; an accurate speed recording and self-acting signal out-Yesterday saw the culmination of a series of events at the Union Pacific railroad shops that in all probability marks an important epoch in the science of railroad transportation. This was the moving under its own power of the new Union Pacific Gasoline Motor Car No. 1, about which so much has been said and written.

In the short length of thirty feet and ft. with indicator dials and arms; two complete sanders of unique design; a full, complete and perfect working high speed automatic air brake equipment, with its numerous levers, springs, cylinders, etc.; a 20-gallon fuel tank, with an up-to-date positive automatic pump feed attachment; besides innumerable reservoirs, primers, storage batteries, emergency hand brakes, etc., the detail of which would have but little meaning for a layman, but all of which is filled with great significance for the people interested.

In addition to all this, the car has a seating capacity of over thirty people, a small baggage room containing about 40 cubic feet of storage room and is guaranteed to maintain a higher speed with less power and at less cost than any other conveyance now in active use on the railroads of the country.

The car is designed for suburban traffic and for short runs in local service. It will be run at the rate of forty miles an hour and has a capacity for twenty-five passengers. It can be stopped more quickly than a locomotive and its mechanism is such that it may be started without a jar. The pressure of a finger on a button will bring it to a stop in a very few seconds.

W. R. McKeen, under whose supervision the car was built, regards it as holding unlimited possibilities. The Lake Shore, the New York Central and the Burlington have all been busy with similar cars, but thus far none of them have produced very good results. In the last six months Mr. McKeen has received inquiries from nearly all the railroads in the United States as to the nature of the car he was building, but he has been chary about giving information and has kept his work hidden.

An official test of the car will be made March 7, when a run will be made to Valley and return. A number of railroad officials and a party of newspaper men will make the trip.

When this car is proven satisfactory the building of a large number like it will be begun. The model is short, but other cars can be built any length and it is probable that they will be much longer.
