Great Pageant Begins.

The windows of the capitol were crowded; there was a deep fringe of spectators along the roofs of senate and house and the porticos of the dome. The trees of the park were loaded with boys and men; the broad acres of the park itself were crowded with thousands upon thousands. Back of this the windows, roofs and porches of the library of congress accommodated a multitude and every residence fronting on the park added to the imposing scene. All these were the plain people. Surrounding the plaza in front of the president's platform were the forming lines of the main parade, while from the adjacent streets everywhere projected heads of columns, military and civic, waiting to fall in their

He then delivered his inaugural address, which surprised his hear ers by its brevity. As the ceremony closed he was again greeted by the roaring cheers

> Accompanied by his escort and followed by troops and civilian paraders, he started for the White House. It was the most perfect column that ever marched in an inaugural parade, though its numbers were less. General Chaffee had insisted that a brigade of the National Guard from each state should be the maximum representation. Never has there been so perfect a regular army column in any previous national pageant. Cavalry, infantry, artillery, engineers, marines, seamen and properly classed with all these, the West Point cadets, thrilled all beholders with this exponent of the perfection of our military

The National Guards of states and thos of the district showed the marked improvement which the practical summer encampments and maneuvers, supervised by regular officers, have accomplished by the abolition of the former military picnics.

Cheers for Colored Troops. While the whole military column was marvel and a delight, as indicated by the continuing tornado of cheers where it passed, there were elements of special interest. The Ninth cavalry, that splendid colored regiment, the heroes of many Indian battles and known to fame at San Juan hill, received the attention they so well merited. The crowds went wild over the section of Rough Riders which participated with the president in the wildness of the rush and joy of the victory at Santiago. It is not strange that there were a soldier's tears in a soldier's eyes as he inet, the supreme court, the heads of the bowed to the salutes of his comrades in

The scouts from the Philippines and the branch of the government and a great Porto Rico battalion excited intense interest and they will never forget their wel-

> The brigade of cadet battalions from many states organized by General Chaffee attracted universal attention and received unbounded applause.

Civic Grand Division The civic grand division of eight brigades in three divisions made up of over fifty organizations was in every respect better organized than ever before, and so, like the whole column, more interesting. There were governors and their gorgeous staffs, many noted political clubs from east and west, college and university men, high school cadets from north and south, several original Roosevelt clubs, Roosevelt home clubs, Roosevelt's neighbors, anthracite miners, rail splitters. Italian clubs, Spanish veterans, secret societies, boys' brigades, newsboys, drum corps, bugle corps, church societies, cowboys and clubs in great variety. It was a column in mosalc, fairly representing every prominent element of American civic life. Though strictly civilian, its committee organizer had given it a semi-military character by appointing quartermaster and commissary generals, inspector generals and every other brand of officer of high rank, and adjutant generals and aides sufficient for an army corps, with General Howard and Gen-Wheeler as leading military features. and the street itself and reaching for two miles and a half. No such brilliant scene of decoration and illumination was ever witnessed before in this country or any other, for here electric effects had their origin and have their greatest development. The dome of the capitol stood white against the darkness, illuminated by seachlights from the top of the Washington monument, and the monument itself, by the same method, was made visible for many miles. The fireworks exceeded all previous discarded. The set pieces were of large dimensions-such as a wheel more than 100 feet in diameter, a presidential piece 200 feet in length, and a national flag 300 feet long carried up 1,000 feet by balloon and there developed in the sight of the city and beyond.

The Inaugural Bail,

The decorations of the ball room most successfully conformed to the agreement that every inauguration should exceed all previous efforts. All was accomp ished that could be effected by extended masses of color, spreading about and over the immense room and its galleries, with miles of evergreen vines, carloads of cut flowers. flags in artistic combination, electric lights by the thousand upon thousands and electric pieces large and small, with one of unrivalled proportions carrying 6,000 lights of varied colors, woven in a most beautiful

In deference to the Sabbath, all ceremonles stopped at midnight, but it was well toward morning be fore the lights were turned down on the most brilliant spectacle that Washington had seen in its long line of notable occasions. Till long after midnight the gathered thousands walked, wondering and enthusiastically, on Pennsylvania avenue, through ong reaches of fairyland. He entered the president's room in the senate wing at 19:53 o'clock. Bills already were awaiting his approval, and senators and representatives also were awaiting him to urge the signing of measures in which they were interested, and the president signed bills before him. Senator Fairbanks abandoned the party as it passed the door of the vice president's oom and entered his new office. Little business awaited the president. The oills which were passed yesterday and at the evening session were presented to him by the house officers and he signed them pulckly. He had considerable time to devote to senators and members who called to pay their respects.

The family of the president and his relaives and a few intimate personal friends appeared at the capitol soon after 11 o clock to withess the ceremonies. They were escorted to seats reserved for them in the

About noon one after another of the diplo matic corps, the supreme court and the members of the house of representatives were announced. They took places reserved for them. Then Vice President elect Fairbanks was announced. Following him President Roosevelt, the president elect, was announced. Oath of Office Administered.

The ceremony was coldly informal, but impressive. After an expectant hush the oath of office was administered to Vice President Fairbanks by Senator Frye of Maine, president pro tempore. The vice president delivered a brief inaugural address to which close heed was given. Then he administered the oath of office to the senators-elect, and with a tap of his gavel the Fifty-eighth congress came to a close. Meantime the people left the galleries and went in procession to the east front of the capitol, where the inauguration of President Roosevelt took place. From the stand, one looking down upon 40,000 upturned faces-a mass of humanity almos covering the broad plaza, and like a slight swell on the ocean in a calm, swaying gently back and forth with no disarrangement of its individual part. Finally those on the stand were seated. There was a pause and a mighty cheer burst from the great concourse as President Roosevelt appeared on the stand. He acknowledged the ovation with dignified courtesy. The cheering ceased as Chief Justice Fuller, his silvered hair falling over his silk and ermine robe, stepped upon the dias. president solemnly repeated the oath after the chief justice and then stooped and kissed the book. As he lifted his head he flashed one glance toward Mrs. Roosevelt and then faced the great multitude. Then the crowd pressed yet closer to hear the inaugural address. The president said: "My Fellow Citizens: No people on earth of boastfulness in our own strength, but with gratitule to the Giver of Good, who has blessed us with the conditions which have enabled us to achieve so large a neasure of well being and of happiness. To us as a people it has been granted to lay the foundations of our national life in a new continent. We are the heirs of the ages, and yet we have had to pay few of the penalties which in old countries are exacted by the dead hand of a bygone civilization. We have not been obliged to fight for our existence against any allen race, and yet our life has calld for the vigor and effort without which the manller and hardier virtues wither away. such conditions it would be our own fault if we failed; and the success which we have had in the past, the success which we confidently believe the future will bring, should cause in us no feeling of vainglory, but rather a deep and abiding realization of all which life has offered us; a full knowledge of responsibility which is ours and a fixed determination to show that inder a free government a mighty people can thrive best, alike as regards the things of the body and the things of the soul.

Much Given, Much Expected. "Much has been given to us and much will rightfully be expected from us. We have duties to others and duties to our selves, and we can shirk neither. We have become a great nation, forced by the fact of its greatness into relations with other nations of the earth, and we must behave as beseems a people with such responsibilities. Toward all other nations, large and small, our attitude must be one of cordial and sincere friendship. We must show not only in our words, but in our deeds that we are earnestly desirous of securing their good will, by acting toward them in a spirit of just and generous recognition of all their rights. But justice and generosity in a nation, as in an individual, count most when shown not by the weak, but by the strong. While ever careful to refrain from wronging others, we must be no less insistent that we are not wronged ourselves. We wish peace, but we wish the peace of justice, the peace We wish it because we of righteousness. think it is right and not because we are afraid. No weak nation that acts manfully and justly should ever have cause to fear us, and no strong power should ever be able to single us out as a subject for insolent aggression.

"Our relations with other powers of the world are important, but still more important are our relations among ourselves. Such growth in wealth, in population and Fifty-eighth congress was in the throes of the century and a quarter of its national in power as this nation has seen during dissolution. Should Face Problems.

'Modern life is both complex and intense. and the tremendous changes wrought by the extraordinary industrial development of the last half century are felt in every fibre of our social and political being. Never before have men tried so vast and formidable an experiment as that of administering the affairs of a continent under the forms of a democratic republic. The conditions which have told for our marvelous material well-being, which have developed to a very high degree our energy. self-reliance and individual initiative, have also brought the care and anxiety inseparable from the accumulation of great wealth in industrial centers. Upon the success of our experiment much depends, not only as regards our own welfare, but as regards the welfare of mankind. If we fail, the cause of free self-government throughout the world will rock to its foundations; and, therefore, our responsibility is heavy, to ourselves, to the world Roosevelt, Master Quintin Roosevelt, the as it is today and to the generations yet unborn. There is no good reason why we should fear the future, but there is every neither hiding from ourselves the gravity of the problems before us nor fearing to approach these problems with the unbending, unflinching purpose to solve them aright. Self-Government Difficult. "Yet, after all, though the problems are new, though the tasks set before us differ from the tasks set before our fathers who founded and preserved this republic, the spirit in which these tasks must be undertaken and these problems faced, if our duty is to be well done, remains essentially unchanged. We know that selfgovernment is difficult. We know that no people needs such high traits of character as that people which seeks to govern its affairs aright through the freely expressed will of the freemen who compose it. But we have faith that we shall not prove false to the memories of the men of the mighty past. They did their work, they left us the splendid heritage we now enjoy We in our turn have an assured confiheritage unwasted and enlarged to our hildren and our children's children. do so we must show, not merely in great crises, but in the everyday affairs of life, the qualities of practical intelligence, of courage, of hardihood and endurance, and, above all, the power of devotion to a lofty ideal, which made great the men who founded this republic in the days of Washington, which made great the men who preserved this republic in the days of Abraham Lincoln.

In a short time President Roosevelt was in the avenue, returning to the White House. His carriage was surrounded by his faithful Rough Rivers and his way was cleared by the brilliant squadron A.* The president stood in the carriage much of the time, bowing right and left in acknowledgment of the gracious enthusiasm which his appearance aroused. He returned to the White House, and after a light luncheon reviewed, surrounded by his family, his personal friends his cabinet and hundreds of distinguished visitors, the magnificent parade formed in

The ceremony was quickly folowed by the final adjournment of the senate of the Fifty-eighth congress, the beginning of a special session, an address vice president and the swearing into office of almost a third of the mem bership of the senate. All these official acts took place in the chamber just before the inauguration of the president and were in reality, while themselves of great import, the prelude of the more important

Vice President's Address. Mr. Fairbanks had no difficulty in be ing heard. He spoke deliberately and distinctly, his voice, so well tried during the last campaign, easily reaching all parts of the chamber. He said:

"We witness the majestic spectacle of a peaceful and orderly beginning of an administration of national affairs under the aws of a free and self-governing people "We pray that Divine favor may attend it and that peace and progress, justice and honor may abide with our country and with our countrymen."

The address received careful attention, and at its conclusion the vice president instructed the secretary of the senate to read the president's call for an extraordinary session of the senate. The reading accomplished and the senate of the Fiftyninth congress thus installed, Dr. Edward Everett Hale, the venerable chaplain of the senate, came forward to deliver the opening prayer of the first session. In response to a quiet signal from the chair the senate and its guests rose and stood while Dr. Hale, in his usual impressive manner, uttered the invocation:

The organization of the senate was then ompleted by the swearing in of senators elected to serve for the next six years. They apeared in platoons of four, in alphabetical order, at the desk of the vice president, each being accompanied by his colleague. The oath was administered by Mr. Fairbanks, and in each case was immediately followed by signing the senate roll of membership. This ceremony concluded the day's session, and the senate adjourned to the outside platform to witness, with others, the inauguration of President Roosevelt.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty. Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realise its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intesines and carries them out of the system. Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic. It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disin-fects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarra All druggists sell charceal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey. The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I siso believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any
