CHAMPIONS ALL IN LINE FOR THE SEASON Pretension, 40 to 1 Shot, Wins Fourth

Rourke Looks Forward to Opening of Practice a Week from Monday with Confidence in His Players.

William Alphonso Rourke, manager of the Omaha Western league base ball team, alias "Pa" Rourke, master mechanic of the Rangers and winner of the 1904 Western league pennant, has signed "War" Sanders for 1906, which makes Manager Rourke's pitching staff now include Jack Pflster, Eddie Quick, Glen Liebhart, Mc-Closkey, G. L. Bemis and Sanders. Companion, who was on the sick list most of lust season, has not yet signed. Sanders arrived from his home at Morristown, Tenn., last week and will remain for the opening of the season. It was understood that there might be some hitch between Rourke and Sanders on the matter of salary, Sanders having received National league salary from the time he came to the Omaha team from St. Louis in July until the close of the season, and it was further believed he might stand out for the same salary before signing. President Rourke says that Sanders has consented to accept Western league salary, which ended the matter.

With Sanders signed up, President Rourke now has seventeen contracts in his desk, Thiel and Companion being the two yet outstanding. The time is fast drawing near for the boys to report, one week from Saturday being the appointed time. A week from next Monday the Rangers will get their working clothes on and hike out to Vinton street for a week of practice before the schedule of exhibition games begins. Transportation has been sent to Companion and Thiel, with instructions to report not later than March 27.

Jockey Club Stewards Called. will now go to Governor Folk for his signa-ture and will doubtless become a law, as the governor made the provisions of the bill the subject of a special message to both houses of the legislature.

On the face of the racing situation it appears to horse-men as if the stewards had simply met to recrtain enclosures in the state, was re-pealed several days ago and will become the same heavy exactions they are now inflicting upon the people of this state in their withstanding the large amount of money spent for bridges, none of the men engaged in such work have ever been able to acquire more than a moderate competency in such busi-

HEER MAKES A NEW RECORD

Concordia Crack Shot Breaks 307 Targets Without a Miss. Targets Without a Miss.

DES MOINES. Is., March 16.—At the lowa State Sportsman's association tournament today W. H. Heer of Concordia. Kan., established a new world's record for the open trap shooting by breaking 307 targets without a miss. He defeated both Fred Gilbert and Crosby. The amateur state championship was won by A. P. McDowell of Adair, Is., with 98 out of 100 birds.

The diamond badge was captured by Niel Layman of Des Moines. Gilbert, Crosby, Heer, Stannard and Borden tied for expert high averages for the three days shooting, with 39 per cent of 600 targets shot at.

WITH THE BOWLERS.

The closest contest ever seen in Omaha was bowled on the association alleys last night. The Storz Blue Ribbons, who are notorious for pulling down the leaders and dropping three straight to the tail-enders, won two games from the Omahas. In every game the last man on each team decided the fight. The Storz boys won the first by six pins; Huntington and Zarp struck out and saved the second for the Omahas by five pins; and the Storz bunch held their nerve long enough to capture the third by ten pins. Only eleven pins separated the grand totals. "Dad" Huntington raises the record for the Storz monthly prize to 693. Fritscher was near him, with 694, and Welty, Zarp and Marble passed the 600 mark. TALK OF IRISH LITERATURE

Bishop Scannell Delivers a Scholarly Lecture on the Topic.

PREFACES IT WITH SKETCH OF THE RACE

Gives Some Selections from the Early Gaelie Poetry Which Was Noted for Its Rhythmic Beauty.

That was a rare and most pleasing, intel ectual treat which Bishop Scannell spread for those who heard him last night at Creighton auditorium. The scholarly prelate was en rapport with his subject, "Irish Literature," and if any one in this section of country understands that fascinating subject most thoroughly the bishop of Omaha is surely the man. Bishop Scanneil had an audience sympathetic and understanding to a degree. Throughout his lecture of an hour and a half the speaker had the most flattering interest. The bishop opened his lecture with brief study or explanation of the origin of the Celts, or Kelts. He said the word is not used among the people themselves, and gave reasons why it is not. Tracing the race in ancient days he explained that the epistle to the Celts; Paul had never written an epistle to the Saxons. Then passing on to the division of the race into peoples east and west he told of the Celto-Germanic al-Hance, and directed attention to the similarity of many words in both languages, especially relating to government, political institutions, law and war. Of the word Irish, the bishop said it is not Irish at all, but an English word. The Irish people call themselves Gaels and the Irish branch of the language is the purest Gaelic and of greatest value to philologists. Having the privilege of an uninterrupted descent, it is the key by which alone the true history of the Gaelic world can be unlocked.

Home of Highest Civilisation.

Having pictured the growth and the widespreading influence of the ancient Gaelic schools and the high degree of civilization in sciences and art to which the nation had attained, Bishop Scannell told of the vandal-like destruction of the ancient schools and churches by the Normans and Danes. "The great wonder is," said the lecturer, "that any fragment even of Irish literature survived the attacks of those pirates. Then the English hatred and condemnation of the Gaelic language, active and long continued, almost completed the destruction There is still, however, a great mass of ancient manuscripts in existence, though they represent but the merest fragment of the once great volume of these writings. Much is lost forever."

"Irish literature of the early time never evolved a drama, strange as it may appear, ' said Bishop Scannell, "It did produce romance in plenty and of a high degree of excellence. The very essence of the national life of Ireland was embodied in these romances, the great bulk of which are irrevocably lost." In this connection the bishop gave a fascinating sketch of the three great cycles of Irish literature, which were most fecund in saga and romance in poetry and prose. These were the mythological cycle, the struggle between good and bad spirits having in this a large part; the heroic cycle, the days of the Red Branch Knights; and the Pinnian and Os sian cycle, the heroes of which were believed by some to be an entirely different race of men from their fellows, but who were really a body of standing troops which existed during seven reigns.

Some fligh Ideals. "On these men were placed four principal first was never to receive a portion with wife. In that they were like the Americans. They were to love a woman for her good manners and virtues, which is slightly unlike the Americans. They were to give verything they had to anyone who migh ask it, not a national characteristic with us; and no man among them was ever to run from less than ten champions.

This Finnian cycle represents one of the nost remarkable evolutions of literature centered around the days of Irish freem, from prehistoric time to the eighth entury of our era. Of the Bardic schools the bishop spoke at length and of the development of the spirit of national poetry which followed their destruction. "It is a tremendous claim to make for Ireland that its sons taught Europe to rhyme," said Rishop Scannell, "but the claim is made good by some of the ablest men of other nations who have investigated the subject. The Irish also taught to Europe the arts of writing, painting and the decorating of here for use in relaying the seventh district manuscripts. But in poetry, in the seventh century they had attained to a pitch perfection in rhyming that is undreamed of ven today among other peoples."

Scattered through that branch of his subject dealing with Irish poetry, Bishop Scannell gave with fine effect selections in the Gaelic language, which he then translated into English, also some beautiful specimens of the Irish style of poetry making.

It is not a cure-all, but for any stomach trouble it is undoubtedly the SAFEST most sensible remedy that can be advised with the prospect of a permanent cure. It is prepared in tablet form, pleasant to taste, composed of vegetable and fruit essences, pure pepsin and Golden Seal, every one of which act effectively in digesting the food eaten, thereby resting and invigorating the weak stomach; REST is nature's cure for any disease, but you cannot rest the STOMACH unless you put into it something that will do its work or assist in the digestion of food. That is exactly what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do; one grain of the digestive principle contained in them will digest 3,000 grains of meat, eggs or similar wholesome loods; they will digest the food whether the stomach is in working order or not, thereby nourishing the body and resting the stomach at the same time, and REST and NOURISHMENT is nature's cure for and cour watery risings. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found at all drug stores at 50 cents per package.

Collier's Remington Number

TIKE the Gibson Number, it is a representative collection of new pictures by a famous artist. Frederic Remington needs no introduction to the American public. His place as a historian of the disappearing West is unique.

This number proves that Remington the illustrator has given way to Remington the painter. "Less work and better work" is what it means to draw exclusively for Collier's. To Remington, as to Gibson, The National Weekly has given a wider scope and a deeper responsibility.

There are many new pictures by Remington in this number, two of them in color; there is a characteristic screed from Remington himself, and appreciations of his work as painter and sculptor by Owen Wister, James Barnes, and Charles Belmont Davis.
