

CURRENT LITERATURE.

"An Honor Girl," by Evelyn Raymond. Illustrated by Bertha G. Davidson, is a bright, helpful story of a girl who as the valedictorian and "honor girl" of her class at high school was a scholarship holder...

In "The Tomboy at Work," by Jeannette Glider, "the tomboy" has become a "business girl," much to the chagrin of the family, for in those days it was the men who did the work and the women remained at home...

"I would like to write for your magazine," he said, as one who had only to be touched to apout poetry or prose. "What sort of writing," said Dixey, by way of encouraging him and also of drawing him out.

In a very handsome book, with each page elaborately decorated and with numerous full page illustrations, Maurice Maeterlinck has many interesting things to say of "Our Friend, The Dog." The frontispiece is a photograph of a beautiful natural monster that has compiled strictly with the laws of its species.

"For the White Christ," by Robert Ames Bennett, (A. C. McClure & Co.), is one of the pretentious books of the season, although issued at popular prices.

"Comrades in Arms," a tale of army life in two hemispheres, by General Charles King. The story is divided into three parts: "What Happened in the East" and "What Happened in Gotham." In the west a rather sensational period is covered and the foundation for a splendid story laid.

how a dear little orphan boy straightened out a family feud involving also about half the roundabout country, as well as family and servants, and by his manliness won his rightful place as heir to a magnificent estate. The Penn Publishing company.

To its series of select novels in paper covers J. B. Lippincott company has just added "Cadeaux of Gascony," one of the most popular books of fiction, by Burton E. Stevenson; "The Mistress of Brae Farm," by Rosa Nouchette Carey, and "The Magic Wheel," by John Strange Winter.

"Andy," by Lucile Lovell, is the story of
