off likely portions with his pick, crushes them as best he can, dumping the dust and fragments into his pan, repeats the separation process.

In the examination of rock for metal bearing the arrastra of the Mexicans and Spaniards has been used extensively, especially in California and Oregon. This contrivance consists of a vertical shaft or axis, which supports several wooden bars fastened at right angles to it. To the ends of the bars are attached heavy flat stones, which, by the movement of the axis, revolve in a circular pit. The specimens of ore are placed in the pit, a stream of water is turned upon them and the arrastra placed in motion by animal or water power.

complete in this portion of the equipment that a fairly correct field analysis can be made of the specimens secured by the use of the drill or by the other prospecting tools. It is the outcropping of a quartz vein is discovered, enough is broken off to allow its character to be studied both from a geological and a chemical standpoint.

After examining it in connection with the formation in the vicinity, the geologist is often able to indicate where the surface can be bored with the possibility of reaching the ore from the outcropping and that from the interior can be approximately determined by the chemist. To crush the ore is a slight undertaking, and with the lead which he has brought along the material can be readily fused in a portable furnace. In fact, he has the essentials for making a "dry assay" on a limited scale, for cupels are now made of such light weight that they can readily be carried on muleback.

EPITAPHY ON EMPTY TOMBS

Congressional Cemetery the Most Unique Burial Ground in Washington. CITY OF THE DEAD WITHOUT INHABITANTS. Memory of Bygone Statesmen and Others Perpetuated in Rows of Cenotaphs Reared by Generous Congresses.

tions on the tombs are being obliterated by the ravages of time. Now the Washington parish wants to utilize this "street" for burial lots and has appealed to congress for authority to properly dispose of the cenotaphs and remains of those interred in the tombs.

Representative Allen of Maine, who used to be Speaker Reed's private secretary, has introduced a bill granting this authority to the vestry of Christ church and the district commissioners have endorsed it. The records concerning the persons interred in the government reservation of Congressional cemetery are incomplete, and there is some doubt as to which of the tombs are inhabited. Such of the records as are reliable indicate that the remains of twenty-five of the nation's sons repose in the mausoleums. In regard to the contents of twenty-five others, there is uncertainty. There are about 170 cenotaphs in memory of persons buried elsewhere.

ing stones honor the memory of Henry Clay and John C. Calhoun.

With the direction of a portion of the grounds, tombs were prepared to receive the ashes of men prominent in legend and in the history of war and peace, members of the diplomatic corps, officers of the army and navy and high officials in the path from the monument to John Quincy Adams is a simple white marble stone under which have rested the remains of Henry Stephen Fox, at one time the British envoy to the United States. Mr. Fox died in Washington in 1846. In the tomb of General Alexander McComb, which adjoins the monument, he carved the text of a general order of the War department eulogizing him for his victory over the British forces at Plattsburg.

separated from the cenotaphs of the legislative dead, and on a gentle slope reaching off to the Potomac, lie the mortal ashes of one of an ancient race—Push-Ma-Ta-Ha, a Choctaw chief. He died in Washington in 1824 "of the croup" after a long and distinguished career, during which he was always known as the "white man's friend."

The monument over his grave says: "Among his last words were the following—'When I am gone let the big guns be fired over me.'"—Brooklyn Eagle. MILLIONS OF WOMEN Use Cuticura Soap exclusively.
