

CURRENT LITERATURE.

"Teddy and Tower," by Seward D. Little, is a story of the early days of California. Teddy's father, although a hard-working and well-esteemed citizen of New Jersey, was in poor circumstances. When the California gold fever swept the country he was one of the first to make his way westward, hoping to send for his family shortly and be able to provide for them better.

The new magazine, Tales, announces one feature that will distinguish it from all other American publications. It is to be largely devoted to fiction translated into English from various foreign languages. Each month it will present a complete novel, an installment of a serial and a number of short stories by the best living writers of Europe.

"The Lounger" in The Critic has, "after discussion with a group of intelligent men and women," chosen the following books as the best—not the "best sellers" in every instance, but the best books—published within the past six months: The six best books, fact, "The Awakening of Japan," by Okakura-Kakuro; "The Wonders of Life," by Ernest Haeckel; "Letters of John Ruskin to Charles Eliot Norton," "The Miscellanies of Monseur D. Conway"; "The Opening of Tibet," by Percival Landon; "Emerson, Poet and Thinker," by Elizabeth Luther Cary. The six best books, fiction: "The Secret Woman," by Eden Philpotts; "The Golden Bowl," by Edith Wharton; "The Divine Fire," by May Sinclair; "The Undercurrent," by Robert Grant; "The Marriage of William Ashe," by Mrs. Humphrey Ward; "The Fugitive Blacksmith," by Charles D. Stewart.

The Vir Publishing Company of Philadelphia announces the publication, in book form, of an address to the students of the University of Pennsylvania, by Robert N. Wilson, M. D., medical adviser to the students, entitled "The Social Evil in University Life." This lecture is a reprint from the Medical News, and has been very largely circulated among the students in nearly every college and university in the United States by the presidents of these institutions.

Messrs. A. S. Barnes & Co. announce a third edition of Abraham Cahan's novel of revolutionary Russia, "The White Terror and the Red."

Joseph A. Altshuler, whose unusual novel, based on a presidential campaign, "The Candidate," is just off the Harper press, is said, although a younger man, to bear a marked physical resemblance to William J. Bryan. Mr. Altshuler has traveled a great deal with Mr. Bryan in his campaigns, and the resemblance is close enough to have led to an amusing mistake. Once, in a small town of western Nebraska, all the population were gathered to hear Mr. Bryan speak. When Mr. Altshuler stepped upon the stage, intending to talk to him in the rear, the audience, thinking Mr. Bryan had arrived, broke into uproarious applause. Mr. Altshuler, deeply embarrassed to find that he was the cause of the outbreak, beat a hasty retreat.

The Christian Science Journal for April, published in Boston, appears in a new dress, thus beginning its twenty-third volume. Since 1853, when it was first published by Mrs. Eddy, it has recorded the interesting progress of the movement. On the first page is a poem by Mrs. Eddy, written for this issue, entitled "Whither," and on another page is an article by the same author discussing "Prevention and Cure for Divorce."

Anticipating the coming camping season, the leading article in Recreation for April is "Summer Camps and Campers" by Arnold Bartlett Parker. The story is filled with illustrations and contains many practical hints for the tenderfoot and his wife in the woods and on the waters. Dan Beard, the editor, has started a new department in this issue, entitled, "Dan Beard and the Boys," written in his well known style. The other departments, devoted to the automobile, camera, guns and ammunition and athletic sports, are filled with newsy comment.

Above books at lowest retail prices. Matthews, 312 South Fifteenth street. "America's Summer Resorts," published by the New York Central railroad, covers a wide range of delightful places to visit, and contains a valuable up-to-date map printed in four colors. NEW POINT IN A CONTROVERSY Who Will Tell a Woman What Sort of Clothes to Wear? SHORT SKIRTS, SIDEWALKS AND SPITTING Dr. L. Wolf of New York Starts Talk and Chief Donahue of Omaha Adds a Few Words.

The statement of Dr. L. Wolf before the Society of Medical Jurisprudence in New York that the prohibition of spitting in street cars and on the sidewalks is nonsense "pure and simple," does not find agreement in the mind of Chief of Police Donahue. Dr. Wolf advocates a law requiring women to wear short dresses, as a means to stop the spreading of disease germs.

"The professor may be correct so far as the carrying of disease germs is concerned," said the chief, "but who is brave enough to attempt to regulate the length of women's skirts. Not for me. I want to be an honest chief of police and live right up to my duties, but if it were up to me to enforce a short-skirt ordinance I'm afraid my reputation would be ruined in a day. There are women who would be perfectly satisfied with skirts at knee length and there are others who can't get their draperies too long. It's all a matter of taste—and some other things, perhaps, I suppose. But apart from the sanitary features of the spitting question, is the esthetic side. Short skirts can't prevent the sidewalks from looking nasty if they are covered with expectorations of various kinds and hues. The appearance of things counts for a good deal and for my part I still maintain that the place to spit is in the gutter, skirts or no skirts. Here in Omaha we have succeeded in training the men pretty well not to spit on the sidewalk or in the street cars and I am glad of it and want to see these rules retained."

Insurance Case on Trial. Judge Kennedy has plenty to keep him on edge in a case now on trial before him. It is entitled "Columbian Optical Company against the British-American Insurance Company of New York," for $2,000, alleged to be due on an insurance policy. Plaintiff company had a fire in June, 1902, and among other policies on their stock was this one. The attorneys in the case are Ralph Breckenridge for the insurance company
