

LIQUOR FOR THE INDIANS

Brewer Decision Open Way to Prevent the Customary Prosecution.

STATE ALONE HAS POWER TO REGULATE

Police Power of Federal Government Does Not Extend to Indians Who Have Become Citizens of the United States.

The full text of the decision of the supreme court of the United States in reference to the sale of liquor to Indian allottees of lands has been received at the office of United States District Attorney Baxter from Washington.

The decision grows out of a case coming to the United States supreme court from Kansas, in the matter of an application for a writ of habeas corpus of Albert Heff, who was convicted and sentenced for selling two quarts of beer to a Kickapoo Indian named John Butler.

Every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States to whom allotments have been made, is deemed to be a citizen of the United States and is entitled to all rights, privileges and immunities as such citizen, without in any manner impairing or otherwise affecting the rights of any such Indian to tribal or other property.

The regulation of the sale of intoxicating liquors is one of the most common and important exercises of the police power, and so far as it is an exercise of the police power it is within the main of the national government's power.

Speaking of the decision, Judge Baxter said: "It is rather sweeping, but still it does not interfere with the law regarding making liquor on the Indian reservation, which is strictly prohibited by the federal statutes."

There are provisions in the state law which prohibit the sale of liquor to Indians. A measure was introduced in the last legislature to prohibit the sale of liquor within ten miles of any Indian reservation, but it was killed in committee.
