CREIGHTON, HE SAYS, IS NOT BARRED

Only Seminaries that Are Strictly Sectarian, Local Educator Thinks, Cannot Participate in This Benefaction,

Except Catholic seminaries, all Catholic institutions of learning will be permitted to participate in the Carnegie pension for college professors. Thus does Father O'Connor, prefect of study of Creighton university, interpret the rules of Mr. Carnegie by which teachers may enjoy the benefit of the pension.

"If I understand Mr. Carnegle's letter correctly," said Father O'Connor, "Creighton university has a right to make application to participate in the pension and will make such application. This because Creighton university is not a sectarian school by any means. And for that matter nearly, if not all Catholic schools are conducted along the same lines, except our seminaries. These seminaries of course are strictly sectarion. In them students are educated strictly according to the church. But in these institutions the church provides itself to care for its superannuated instructors, so they will lose nothing by being deprived of participation in the Carnegie pension.

"Our other schools, however, are not sectarian. No religious test is necessary to secure admission to them. Every person who subscribes to the rules of the institution-and those rules merely require that the person conduct himself decently-may enter and become a student. Our instructors are selected for competency and not for their religious belief. In our law departments and in our medical departments a majority of the instructors are not of our religious body and their religious belief makes absolutely no difference.

Bulk of Schools Get In. "So in my opinion the rules laid down by Mr. Carnegie will not deprive the great bulk of Catholic schools from participating in the pension fund. The rules merely will deprive our seminaries just like they will schools conducted by a Methodist church or any other church which employs instructors of the same denomination and which instructs its students along the lines of the particular denomination.

"As far as the pension is concerned I believe it is the grandest thing Mr. Carnegie has ever done, and he cannot be given too much praise. In Austria and in Germany and other countries except our own, the state provides a pension for its superannuated instructors, but this is the first step in that direction in the United States. Teachers as a rule upon becoming unfit for work are dependent. As a rule they are not business men and being absorbed in their work overlook the material side of life. Denominational schools will look after their own instructors and in providing a pension for these other schools Mr. Carnegie has fione a most benevolent act."

SEVERAL MEN AND CHARGES Assortment of Prisoners Arraigned

Before Judge Day for Various Alleged Offenses.

A bunch of innocent citizens was taken into Judge Day's court Saturday morning and subjected to the great inconvenience of being arraigned before the bar of justice on charges that would stagger any innocent person. James A. Garfield, a colored man from somewhere besides Ohlo, is annoyed be cause he is charged with daylight breaking and entering. This he strenuously denies, and on that denial he is having a trial.

When an information was read charging him with abandoning his little son March 7, Isaac Silkett resented the imputation and informed the court he had secured a lawyer to see that he gets justice.

County Attorney Slabaugh brought a pained look to the large, full face of Chris Reinken when he read an information alleging that Reinken had stolen $50 in bills and silver from one Frank Sullivan. Reinken said he had not even the small amount necessary to retain an attorney and out of pity for his outraged feelings Judge Day named Frank Weaver as consoler and counsellor.

Joseph Mozeek is an Ethiopian, but not a Mohammedan. One Irene Connors asserts that Mozeek stole from her house twenty yards of silk, valued at $20, but Joseph says Irene is "shuly mistooken." Fred Spalding is accused of playing a criminal April fool joke on Frank Sawtelle, who lives at the Center hotel, by stealing all his holiday jewelry. Frank would not stand for it, and now Fred is to face a jury with his tale of how he did not steal the wishbone stickpin and other things. Henry Lee is accused of being the young man who admired Martin J. Cannon's big diamond ring so much that he fitted it on, was suited and walked away, incidentally going to Iowa on a flying trip. He was brought back on a train, and on his posttive assertion that he is not guilty J. A. C. Kennedy will undertake his defense. A colored man with the impressive name of Immanuel opened his big eyes with a deprecating glance at the court when asked if he was guilty of stealing from G. E. Drew a $25 watch on April 9. Certainly not, he said; he had no time to do such a thing. Back to the bastile he went until the court can forget his soulful look and give him a chance to exercise it on

nois City.

Judge Day says he gained some valuable pointers by his visit to the juvenile court in Chicago. He was present at the Saturlay session of the court, when something like four score boys and girls were up for a hearing. Court is held in Chicago Wednesday and Saturday and Judge Day for a hearing. was told the crowd he saw is a fair average gathering of Chicago delinquent children. Where no other disposition can be made of them with parents or guardians, they are sent to a detention home provided by the city. One feature of the Chicago court which does not appeal to Judge Day is that all
