Baron Speck von Sternberg, German ambassador, has throughout been the president's right bower in the negotiations and as the personal envoy of Emperor William has been able from the outset to assure the president absolute and hearty support of the German emperor in any effort to bring about peace. It can now be said that for days the German emperor has been supplementing the efforts of the president by communication with the czar urging peace. Through the Grand Duke Michael, who attended the wedding of the crown prince in Berlin, the emperor sent the most urgent advice to the czar that peace in the interests of Russia be concluded without further hostilities. The close personal friendship between the president and the German ambassador has been an important factor in the premliminaries.

Aware of the preference of Japan to communicate its peace terms to Russia direct, the president in the last few days has been active in counselling moderation to Japan rather than endeavoring to draw from Tokio some statement of probable terms. At the Russian embassy tonight Cassini remained without advices Count from St. Petersburg and he was unwilling to comment on any phase of the situation.
