JUDGE ATTACKS EVIDENCE

Jurist Who Sentenced Ex-Convict Holds Testimony Against Client Worthless.

LATTER IS INDICTED WITH DEFENDANT

Second Day of Trial in Federal Court of C. E. Tullis Develops Enough to Break the Monotony.

The second day of the trial of C. E. Tullis of Oconto, Chatter county, on the charge of using the United States mails for the purpose of defrauding purposes began Friday morning in the United States district court, before Judge Munger.

One of the principal witnesses against the accused is Eddie Penn, an ex-convict, who is jointly indicted with Tullis for the same offense. The question arose Thursday afternoon as to the competency of the testimony of Penn, from the alleged fact that he had not been restored to his civil rights by pardon, and that having served his full term of three years on a conviction of forgery he was not a competent witness. A peculiar feature of the case is that Judge Homer Sullivan of Columbus, who is attorney for C. E. Tullis in this case, was the judge who sentenced Penn to three years in the penitentiary for forgery. Judge Sullivan holds that Penn's evidence in this case should not be taken into consideration at all. He cited numerous authorities in support of his contention and asked leave to present other authorities during Friday afternoon. The witness, Penn, was thereupon withdrawn from the stand until Judge Munger makes a final ruling upon the question.

Midirected Letter Starts It. The case against Tullis and Penn results from a misdirected letter, which instead of going to its destination intended by its writers got stalled somewhere in Iowa and its contents being suspected the letter fell into the hands of the postoffice inspectors and it was found that it was an order for $500 of counterfeit money to be forwarded to Tullis address by express at Oconto. In the interval of the mailing of the letter and its investigation by the postoffice inspectors the package of supposed green goods, which had been ordered by telegraph, arrived at the express office at Oconto. There was $100 C. O. D. charges on it, but Tullis declined to pay the $150 until he examined the package. This the express agent declined to allow, as there were no such instructions on the package. In the meanwhile the letter episode had ripened and its origin was traced to Oconto, with Tullis and Penn as the suspected writers. Their arrest followed and they were taken before the United States commissioner at Grand Island for examination. The package had in the meanwhile been turned over to the United States authorities and upon its examination in the commissioner's office at Grand Island it was found to contain but a block of wood, or a compound of sawdust and glue, solidly welded together. The package was an oblong box of zinc about 4 inches square by 5 inches long. Inside the box, after it had been opened with a cold chisel and hatchet, so securely had it been soldered together, was found a note saying that this box had been sent out merely as a blind to deceive the authorities, but that the genuine "green goods" would be forthcoming later. They had not arrived at last accounts.

Tullis was released on bond after his examination at Grand Island and Penn was brought to Omaha and has since been in the Douglas county jail. The case is attracting considerable interest with the United States postal authorities and the secret service department of the government, from the fact that it is an opening wedge into the "green goods" circular business, which emanates from New York City, with branches in New Jersey and Illinois as well as at Orangeburg, N. Y. Postoffice Inspector Boyle of New York City, one of the best known post-office inspectors in the service, is here a witness in the case. The trial is likely to continue all day Friday and may possibly run over into Monday next.

HELP FOR STEALING FOWLS

Local Poultry and Pail Are Bound Over to the District Court.

Hugh Ward, known in local pugilistic circles as "Kid" Ward, and James Young, both of whom were arrested Tuesday morning by Captain Haze and Sergeant Havey, have been bound over from the police to the district court by Police Magistrate Young. The bond was placed at $500 in each case. Charges of breaking and entering the chicken houses of Henry Burkamp and Hans N. Terp of Forty-second street and Redick avenue were filed by Deputy County Attorney Foster against Ward and Young. The prisoners pleaded guilty and were bound over on the evidence offered at the preliminary hearing. Burkamp and Terp identified chickens found in the possession of Ward and Young. It is stated.

AT MANAWA SUNDAY.

Elephants' Swimming Race. It has been a very long time since interest and excitement has been aroused in Omaha and Council Bluffs by any event like unto that being manifested in the elephant race and aquatic performance that will take place at Manawa Sunday afternoon, June 25. The street railway company is figuring seriously to solve just how to handle the big crowds which should be there to see the race, for estimates of the number of people that will want to see this rare event are variously estimated from fifty to seventy-five thousand people. The old power house on the Iowa side of the river that was shut down several months ago will be started up again to add its power to that supplied from the new power house in Omaha, which will give a current capable of pulling cars as close as they can be run together and every available car from the different lines will be placed in the extra service on the Manawa line. The sixteen elephants will make the plunge driven by their native Cingalese drivers at 4 p. m. Then the fun will start, as the big beasts throw water with their trunks high into the air like fountains or squirt into each other's eyes. Several will occasionally join in ducking another animal and when he emerges with trampled dignity his screeches can be heard for a great distance. The swimming race between several of the herd is the feature event however. The sight of a herd of elephants in water is indeed rare in this part of the world and as it is just about as interesting from an educational standpoint as from the spectacular show which appears in Council Bluffs to give the aquatic exhibition by the payment of a very large amount of money.

Not only watches and diamonds, but all other jewelry, sold below prices at Huberman's store, s. e. corner 13th and Douglas.

Look Over the Markets. C. A. Ritchie, farmer and elevator owner from Louisville, was in the city Friday looking over the markets. He and Tom Farnicle have several fields of corn in Cass county in which they take a special pride, but Mr. Ritchie looks more to last year's crop than to the coming one, however, which he says is sure to be a "corker." Mr. Ritchie says the bridge at Louisville is still out and there is no crossing for wagons and automobiles, but the warring factions are apt to get together by fall and build a bridge so that autos can spin from Omaha to Lincoln by the old road.
