

CURRENT LITERATURE.

One of the most important chapters in "The Freedom of Life," the new book by Annie Payson Call, author of "Flower Through Repose," etc., published by Little, Brown & Co., is the chapter on "How to Sleep Restfully." Miss Call says:

"There are three things that prevent sleep—over-fatigue, material disturbances from the outside, and mental disturbances from within. "In nice cases out of ten it is the unwillingness to be awake that keeps us awake. We wonder why we do not sleep. We toss and turn and wish we could sleep. We fret, and fume, and worry, because we do not sleep. We think of all we have to do on the following day, and are oppressed with the thought that we cannot do it if we do not sleep. First, we try one experiment to see if it will not make us sleep, and when it fails, we try another, and perhaps another. In each experiment we are watching to see if it will work. There are many things to do, any one of which might help us to sleep, but the watching to see if they will work keeps us awake. "There are five things to remember to help rest an over-tired brain: 1. A healthy indifference to wakefulness. 2. Concentration of the mind on simple things. 3. Relaxation of the body. 4. Gentle rhythmic breathing of fresh air. 5. Regular nourishment."

The Harpers announce that the sixth volume in the "American Nation" series is ready for immediate publication. This volume will be called "Provincial America," and is written by Evaris B. Greene, Ph.D., professor of history, University of Illinois. It covers the early days of the development of the American commonwealth, from 1590 to 1760, and is the first of the second group of five volumes under the general heading of "Transformation into a Nation." Prof. Greene is a specialist in the period of which he writes. After graduating from Harvard, he became instructor in history in that university, obtaining his Ph.D. degree in 1892. He followed a few years' travel and study in Germany before he took up his work at the University of Illinois, where he has been professor of history for the past eight or ten years. Prof. Greene has been a frequent contributor to various historical and educational periodicals, and has written a volume entitled "The Provincial Governor in the English Colonies of North America." Volume VI carries out the plan for the entire series originally set out by A. B. Hart of Harvard university, outlines it: "A history written by experts for laymen."

The Vir Publishing Company of Philadelphia, has just divided into gold amounts ten persons in the United States and one in England for the name "Hubbard, Wife and Home," which was adjudged the title best suited for Dr. Charles Frederic Goss' new book, one to which men and women sentimentally attach their names and which is the best means of correcting it will turn for suggestion and relief.

D. Appleton & Co. have acquired the Booklovers' Magazine, Philadelphia, and will publish it in New York under the title of Appleton's Booklovers' Magazine, beginning with the July number. It is said that D. Appleton & Co. expect to greatly increase their sales of books and the efficiency of their advertising through its agency. It is understood that the policy of the magazine will be changed and that the fact and fiction of Appleton's best authors will be published in it serially. The house will naturally make an extraordinary effort to have the most popular material published under the new title a great success and much is to be expected of it.

So attractive and so varied are the articles in the World of Today for July that readers will find it difficult to decide what to read first. For a 10-cent magazine the quality of both the reading matter and the illustrations is remarkable. The wide interest in the municipal ownership problem makes particularly timely the article by Francis W. Parker on "Municipal Ownership and Grant."

For both timeliness and vivacity the July number of the Atlantic is a notable one. The leading article, a plea for Publicity for Express Companies, by Prof. F. H. Dixon, is a searching study of the vast but little understood business of the express companies in this country which will open the eyes of many people.

The summer number of Poet Lore is one of the most valuable issues of this magazine so absolutely indispensable to the student of literature. The leading contribution is a complete translation of Maeterlinck's new play, "Joyzele," and like all Poet Lore plays, the translation is a masterpiece, giving in English the very life of the French original. Poet Lore seems to gain in both literary value and typographical excellence with every issue.

If you want to feel glad that you are alive and able to enjoy the wealth of outdoor treasures that our magnificent country affords, just read the Country Calendar for July. The luscious yellow-green castanets of the cover well indexes the zest that waits within. The Country Calendar's continued employment of the sincerest and pleasantest outdoor literature, with its lavishly beautiful pictures and typography, will keep it high in the interests of those who truly love "God's green earth."

Between the very attractive and reasonable covers the Pilgrim for July contains a number of articles of more than passing interest and quantity of genuinely good fiction. The stories by Samuel Merwin, Susie Bouchelle Wight and Karl Estlin Harriman are all charmingly illustrated and deal with affairs of life in such a way as to make for the most entertainment in the least space.

LESS MONEY FOR SCHOOLS

Three Thousand Dollars Cut Off by Change in Method of Taking Census.

Complete returns for the Omaha school census show the net decrease in persons of school age enumerated is 2,513, being due, as previously explained, to eliminating the old duplication of names and the wholesale use by inserting the membership rolls of colleges, parochial and private schools, academies and convents.

This means a loss of about $3,000 in state school money, for the amount received is measured by the number of persons of school age in the district. Last year's census gave 31,752 and the one this year only 29,239. In the missing district, the north half of the Second ward, the drop was from 3,661 to 2,148.
