His Little Game Not Exposed by His Purely Philanthropic Educational Trips Through the Western Farming Country.

An hour's personal chat with Thomas W. Lawson and an hour and a half of close observation of the man while delivering his set address leaves one a good ways up in the air as to just what Lawson wants. expects, or is trying to do. He may, out of his innate audacity and belief in his own power or destiny, be trying to place himself in the way of presidential lightning. He always takes pains to dwell on the assertion that there is no politics in his campaign of philanthropy, or vengeance, or retribution, call it what you will. He insists that he has no time to play politics. He also gives the laugh to the Bryan brand of democracy and will have one of state paternalism. Socialism he ignores. But the Kansas brand of republicanism is rather popular with the Boston mystery, who confesses he is a republican himself.

In a personal interview he was asked: "Mr. Lawson, do you see any more heads in sight to hit at?" The oratorical eyes of the Boston man seemed to get father than ever to the front and he flashed out: "Do I? Why, I have only commenced. I can go on with my story (he always uses business, the newspaper word for his writing) for twenty years and then not be through. I am going to educate the American people as they have never been educated before."

Sphinxlike at All Times. This was the most specific answer he gave to any question asked by a group of newspaper correspondents from Omaha, Sloux City, St. Paul and Des Moines. Even the four Boston Newspaper writers who have been traveling with him on his peculiar trip have given to the world no more enlightening expression. To questions about the effect of his campaign on the investments of people in the east and the possible benefit to people in other sections of the country, he replied with almost verbatim extracts from his magazine articles. The nearest he ever gets
