Exploits of Sherlock Holmes (Continued from Page Seven.)
"Come with me, and we will see what is to be made of this fellow." Striding through the scattered knots of people who lounged round the flaring stalls, my companion spedily overtook the little man and touched him upon the shoulder.
"Who are you, then? What do you want?" he asked, in a quavering voice.
"You will excuse me," said Holmes, blandly, "but I could not help overhearing the questions which you put to the salesman just now. I think that I could be of assistance to you."
"Who? Who are you? How could you know anything of this matter?"
"My name is Sherlock Holmes. It is my business to know what others don't know."
"But you can know nothing of this."
"Excuse me, I know everything of it. You are endeavoring to trace some geese which were sold by Mrs. Oakshott of Brixton road to a man named Breckinridge, by him in turn to Mr. Windgate of the 'Alpha,' and by him to his club, of which Mr. Henry Baker is a member."
"Oh, sir, you are the very man whom I have longed to meet," cried the little fellow, with outstretched hands.
Sherlock Holmes halted a four-wheeler which was passing. "In that case we had better discuss it in a cozy room rather than in this windswept market place," said he. "But, pray tell me, before we go further, who is it that I have the pleasure of assisting?"
The man hesitated for an instant. "My name is John Robinson," he answered.
"No, no; the real name," said Holmes, sweetly. "It is always awkward doing business with an alias."
"Will, then," said he, "my real name is James Ryder."
"Precisely so. Head attendant at the Hotel Cosmopolitan. Pray step into the cab and I shall be able to tell you everything you would wish to know."
The little man stood glancing from one to the other of us with half-frightened, half hopeful eyes, as one who is not sure whether he is on the verge of a windfall or of a catastrophe. Then he stepped into the cab and in half an hour we were back in the sitting room at Baker street. Nothing had been said during the drive, but the high, thin breathing of our new companion and the clasping and unclasping of his hands spoke of the nervous tension within him.
"Here we are," said Holmes, cheerily. "Now, then, you want to know what became of those geese?"
"Yes, sir."
"Or, rather, I fancy, of that goose. It was one bird, I imagine, in which you were interested—white, with a black bar across the tail."
Ryder quivered with emotion. "Oh, sir," he cried, "quay tell me where it went?"
"Here."
"Yes; and a most remarkable bird it proved. I don't wonder that you should take an interest in it. It laid an egg after it was dead—the bonniest, brightest little blue egg that ever was seen. I have it here in my museum."
Our visitor staggered to his feet and clutched the mantelpiece with his right hand. Holmes unlocked his strong box and held up the blue carbuncle, which shone out like a star.
"The game's up, Ryder," said Holmes, quietly. "Hold up, man, or you'll be into the fire! Give him an arm back into his chair, Watson. He's not got blood enough to go to for felony with impunity. Give him a dash of brandy. Go! Now he looks a little more human. What a shrimp it is! For a moment he had staggered and nearly fallen, but the brandy brought a tinge of color into his cheeks, and he sat staring with frightened eyes at his accuser.

"I have almost every link in my hands and all the proofs which I could possibly need, so there is little which you need tell me. Still, that little may as well be cleared up to make the case complete. You had heard, Ryder, of this blue stone of the Countess of Morcar's?"
"Of course, my lord," said the man, who told me of it," said he in a crackling voice.
"I see—her ladyship's waiting maid. Well, the temptation of sudden wealth so easily acquired was too much for you, as it has been for better men before you; but you were very scrupulous in the means you used. It seems to me, Ryder, that there is the making of a very pretty villain in you. You knew that this man Horner, the plumber, had been concerned in some such matter before, and that suspicion would rest the more readily upon him. What did you do, then? You made some small job in my lady's room—you and your confederate, Cusack—and you managed that he should be the man sent for. Then, when he had left, you rifled the jewel case, raised the alarm and had this unfortunate man arrested. You then—"
Ryder threw himself down suddenly upon the rug and clutched at my companion's knee. "For God's sake, have mercy!" he shrieked. "Think of my father! of my mother! It would break their hearts. I never went wrong before! I never will again. I swear it! I'll swear it on a Bible. Oh, don't bring it into court, please!"
"Get back into your chair," said Holmes, sternly. "It is very well to cringe and crawl now, but you thought little enough of a crime of which he knows nothing."
"I will try, Mr. Holmes. I will leave the country, sir. Then the charge against him will break down."
"Hum! We will talk about that. And now let us hear a true account of the next act. How did you get the stone into the goose, and how came the goose into the open market? Tell us the truth, for there lies your only hope of safety."
Ryder passed his tongue over his parched lips. "I will tell you just how it happened, sir," said he. "When Horner had been arrested it seemed to me that it would be best for me to get away with the stone at once, for I did not know at what moment the police might take it into their heads to search me and my room. There was no place about the hotel where it would be safe. I went out, as if on some commission, and I made for my sister's house. She had married a man named Oakshott, and lived in Brixton road, where she fattened fowls for the market. All the way there every man I met seemed to be a policeman or a detective; and for all that it was a cold night the sweat was pouring down my face before I came to the Brixton road. My sister asked me what was the matter, and why I was so pale; but I told her that I had been upset by the jewel robbery at the hotel. Then I went into the back yard and smoked a pipe and wondered what best to do.
"I had a friend once named Magdalen, who went to the bad, and has just been serving his time in Pentonville. One day he had met me and fell into talk about the ways of thieves, and how they could get rid of what they stole. I knew that he would be true to me, for I knew one or two things about him; so I made up my mind to go right on to Kilburn, where he lived, and take him into my confidence. He would show me how to turn the stone into money. But how to get to him in safety? I thought of the agencies I had gone through in coming from the hotel. I might at any moment be seized and searched, and there would be the stone in my waistcoat pocket. I was leaning
