HUMMEL OUT DOING ALMS
Street Commissioner Closes Office to Help Bury the Dead.
STREET WORKER'S LITTLE CHILD DIES
There is Need of Help Toward Affording a Burial and Men at City Hall Lead a Hand.
The door of the street commissioner's office at the city hall was closed Friday morning. Neither Commissioner Hummel nor his timekeeper, George Jewett, was in the office and their roll top desks were down. Persons having business with the street commissioner had to wait. If they were impatient and asked why they heard a story and after hearing the story they were no longer impatient. On the contrary, they were rather glad that the commissioner was not doing business.
Thursday morning Commissioner Hummel was told by some of his laborers that the family of Frank Nestline, formerly one of the street repair gangs, but among those laid off not long ago because of short funds, was in trouble.
"Whatever the trouble?" asked Hummel.
"Seven-year-old daughter dead," was the reply. "She swallowed a copper penny and it lodged in the intestines, causing gangrene. She was operated upon, but it was too late. She is next to the oldest child. There are three others."

When the street commissioner returned to the city hall he told the story. There was a general turning inside out of pockets of the men in the street department. Councilman Nicholson happened to overhear it and contributed a $5 bill. A big load of provisions was sent out from the county store. Even coal was needed and County Agent Glassman provided this and it was hauled out in one of the city wagons. An undertaker was seen and a florist. Friday morning the little girl was given as respectable a funeral as any family could wish for. Besides the street commissioner and Mr. Jewett, other men from the street department were present.
Commissioner Hummel and his assistants plan to rebuild the flimsy cottage, put in a new floor and make it warm for the winter. They are getting clothing together also for the use of the Nestline family.

MOTHER AND BABES BROKE
Mrs. E. H. Wayman, a Widow, Courageous in Face of Want.
ASSOCIATED CHARITIES CARING FOR HER
Husband Died in Montana a Year Ago
After Futile Search for Lost Health and Woman Was Left Penniless.
The babies have the whooping cough and no one would take them in, so Mrs. E. H. Wayman and her two children had to sleep three nights in the market house at Fourteenth street and Capitol avenue. Their bed and food were provided by the Associated Charities. Late Thursday afternoon a place was found for the family in a rooming house by Superintendent Morris of the charity organization. They will be cared for temporarily by the county.

SEASONABLE FASHIONS.
NO. 4660—GIRL'S YOKE DRESS.
Dresses for every-day wear from an important item in the small girl's wardrobe. Simplicity is the keynote of good taste and the design shown conforms to this principle—a pretty-shaped yoke, over a full-bellied blouse and full-gathered skirt, which is simply finished by a deep hem. Any style of trimming may be adopted, and a pretty idea is to trim the yoke or make it entirely of lace insertion and edge it with lace ruffe. The mode, however, is suitable for plain, every-day gingham or the finer materials in organdie, dimity or wash silk.
Wares, 4 to 10 years.

Madeline Island, including that of W. P. Harford. So far as known, however, all from here occupied separate cottages and were not domiciled in the dormitory, which was used as a lodging place for summer visitors.
DOG MORE COSTLY EACH DAY
City Prosecutor Tom Lee Finds Price Popping Perpetual Cause of Expense.
City Prosecutor Tom Lee (occidental pronunciation, not Asiatic), has a dog that is by all rules of the dog herd book a prize canine. It is of the breed of Boston's best, a black terrier. When six weeks old the man that gave the dog to Lee was offered $100 for the pup. He did not take the money, but gave the puppy to Mr. Lee as a token of friendship and a high sign of esteem. Mr. Lee jumped at the value the pup took him in his arms and with all the airs that Beau Brummel might have put on in carrying the king's royal poodle in the brave days of old Mr. Lee toted the dog away to his hotel.
Right there was where the troubles of the debutant city prosecutor began. The prize pup was finicky, a veritable lace stocking of his tribe. Lee hired the colored porter to take care of the dog at night and "house break" him. Dog fanciers will know that this doesn't mean burglary, not even second story work. It is simply to make the young dog behave himself. But it is as true of the four-footed aristocrat as of the two-legged one that you cannot put old heads a dog on young shoulders. The colored man took the dog home and spread a lot of white-a-brac the first night. Lee paid for this with some misgiving, but still retained confidence in the dog. The next night the colored dog trainer tied his charge to a commode on which there was a bowl and pitcher, with a few other articles of use and utility. In his dreams of frolic in wide fields the $100 pup pulled the commode over and the crockery was shattered; also one side of the commode was badly disfigured, and the neighborhood aroused. Mr. Lee showed his good faith by paying for the damage, still cherishing his confidence in the dog.
Next afternoon Judge Berka's right hand supporter wanted to lose the pup while he went to a ball game, so he staid him in a room adjoining the hotel office. The confinement made the pup mad and he jumped through a window, fell on the office floor, in getting up tipped a baby over and aroused the ire of the baby's mother, who started for the pup with a sharp parasol. The pup side-stepped and the woman careened against a gum machine, which fell against the office bell and made it ring like a fire alarm. This brought the house policeman, the head porter and all the bell boys, one of whom bumped into the bewildered dog and stumbled over against a dignified old gentleman, who nooked the boy with his cane. Then the d. o. g. (not the dog) aimed a blow at the pup, who was trying to make friends with him, missed his mark and fell and bellowed for help of the police.
About the time the riot was quelled a friend of Mr. Lee in sight and volunteered to care for the pup until its master showed up. Somebody got to Lee first and he let his friend keep the dog all night. The dog snored up the friend's annotated edition of the Bible, bit into his best shoes

OMAHA ALL RIGHT FOR HOME
Gate City Suits Kentuckian to Live in, but He Gets Wife in Missouri.
A romance that budded and bloomed at Excelsior Springs with a young man from Kentucky and a young woman from Independence, Kan., as the principal characters, brought about the marriage of J. C. Slaton and Miss Roy Courtenay early in the week at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Courtenay at Independence.
Several months ago Slaton forsook Kentucky and came west, picking out Omaha as the city he liked best. He established himself here at a boarding house at 285 Farnam street and immediately became a social favorite.
He left last week for Excelsior Springs, taking his friends nothing of his intentions. The thoughts and air castles of more than one Omaha lass accompanied the handsome Kentuckian on his journey, but this kind of "absent treatment" had no deterring effect.

and tore down a lace curtain, upset a spindle-legged table on which sat an ornate ormolu clock, and finally was kicked out into the street, where he had all along longed to be.
Tom Lee has found his dog again, and as a faithful public official, he says he is going to keep him from committing any more assault and battery on anything or anybody. "I've got to do it," says Mr. Lee, "or the dog will break me. He stands for a lot of money as it is."
