Practical Practice

The way to learn to do a thing is to do it. The way to learn to conduct a business is to conduct one. Practice makes perfect-and also makes theory look like coin of very small denomination.

The business course at Boyles College begins in actual practice-coninues in actual practice-ends in actual practice.

We spent over $15,000 equipping our college with splendidly equipped eperate offices applying to Transportation, Retail, Wholesale, Commission and Banking. Each office is supplied with the books, including all the necessary appurtenances for ordinary ledger work, loose-leaf ledger system, card ledger system, and all the other modern office time-saving devices including eighty standard make typewriters that are used in similar offices in the business world. These books must be kept, the transactions pertaining to the business of each office made and the entire business of each office conducted by the Boyles College student.

The student knows what he is doing, why he is doing it and what would happen if he made a mistake while doing it. He must figure out things for himself. He is in business for himself. If he runs across a "snag," he won't find "the answer in the back of the book." He is taught to rely on himself. This sows self-confidence and self-confidence blossoms out in success.
