HAS BEEN ENGAGED BEFORE

Fair Plaintiff in Breach of Promise Suit Cross-Examined.

DEFENDANT ALSO HAS TURN ON STAND

Both of Them Considerably Embarrassed by the Questions Put to Them—Picture Shows Great Change in Defendant.

Miss Seythia Ferguson, the fair plaintiff from Kentucky in the $2,000 breach of promise suit against W. H. Kennedy, the aged farmer of Montgomery county, had rather an uncomfortable day of it in federal court yesterday and while under cross-examination was asked a number of pointed questions which evidently somewhat embarrassed her. On the whole the defense seemingly scored heavily yesterday. Miss Ferguson took the stand on her own behalf yesterday afternoon and it was during her cross-examination that the defense got its innings. One of the first questions put to the plaintiff by counsel for the defense was: "How many times have you been engaged before?" "Three times," answered Miss Ferguson, after a slight hesitation. "Well, with this one it makes four altogether," suggested counsel. "Yes, four times," was the reply given rather reluctantly. "How many suits for breach of promise have you prosecuted?" was the next question asked by the defendant's counsel. "Only this one," was the reply. "The others were settled, then?" queried counsel. "In some form," replied the fair plaintiff, while the color mounted to her cheeks. "Then you know what it meant when you said in your letter to Mr. Kennedy that if he wanted to be 'extricated' he knew what was best to do?" was the next question asked by counsel. "I certainly knew what I was doing," was the reply, which was given as if the fair plaintiff meant it.

Picture Shows Difference.

During the cross-examination of Miss Ferguson counsel for the defense introduced a number of letters written by the plaintiff to Kennedy and the salient points of these were read to the jury with considerable emphasis by Attorney Genung. Miss Ferguson on direct examination gave her age as 25 and offered in evidence a photograph of Kennedy taken at the time he visited her in Kentucky, which showed that the defendant at that time presented a very different appearance to what he does in court. The picture showed him clean shaven, dressed in a nobby suit of clothes and a big diamond ring on his finger. This is a striking contrast to his present appearance, as he looks the typical farmer, with his blue hickory shirt, and white whiskers fringing his face. Miss Ferguson stated that Kennedy's advertisement in the matrimonial journal gave him as 45, whereas in fact he was at that time 63 years of age. Prior to Miss Ferguson giving her testimony the defendant was placed on the stand by counsel for the plaintiff. He appeared greatly embarrassed and exceeded himself in nervousness and when asked the cause of his extreme nervousness Kennedy replied, much to the amusement of every one in the court room: "Judge Mitchell (one of the attorneys for the plaintiff) stand where that man is when he got me on the last night when he got me on the stand. This is the man who has deceived me. Kennedy's testimony was to the effect that Miss Ferguson had released him from the engagement. The plaintiff was still on the witness stand when the court adjourned for the day. It is understood that the defense will move for a verdict at the close of the plaintiff's evidence. The court room was crowded all day and Court Bailiff McFadden counted over eighty women in the room at one time. The crowd was augmented during the afternoon session by a number of high school girls, who apparently listened with breathless interest to the reading of the plaintiff's letters. During the day a number of women visited the district clerk's room, but on being informed by Bailiff Matlock that the breach of promise suit was on trial in the federal building hurriedly departed for the latter place.

MARCUS GETS TERM IN PRISON

Will Not Trouble the Police During the Next Six Months. Maurice Marcus, the crippled youth who has given the authorities much trouble, was sentenced yesterday in district court to the charge of breaking into W. E. Murphy's candy and cigar store, and Judge Macy sentenced him to six months in the penitentiary at Fort Madison. There were two indictments against Marcus, the second of which, for obstructing of shrubs in a Cuban park, was dismissed.

Golden Dies from Injuries.

Thomas W. Golden, who was crushed beneath a switch engine in the Northwestern yards Thursday night, succumbed to his injuries three hours after being taken to Mercy hospital. Golden, who was engine foreman of the night switching crew, was standing on the footboard of the engine when in passing a crossing at Avenue E a sudden lurch of the locomotive caused the footboard to strike the planks of the crossing. Golden lost his balance and was thrown directly in front of the engine. Both legs were badly mangled from the knees down and he received severe injuries about the head. At the hospital it was found necessary to amputate both legs just below the knees, but Golden failed to rally from the shock of the amputation. Golden was a single man and had been in the employ of the Northwestern for seven years. He boarded at the Metropolitan hotel. His body was sent last night to Escanaba, Mich., where his mother lives. Coroner Tremor stated yesterday that it was doubtful if he would hold an inquest unless Golden's relatives requested it.

Thursday the board ordered transportation furnished Mrs. L. A. Potter for her two children, whom she desired to send to a relative in Ottumwa, where they would be cared for and sent to school. Yesterday the supervisors rescinded this action, having in the meantime learned that Mrs. Potter had been appointed guardian of her husband, an inmate of the insane ward at St. Bernard's, for the purpose of collecting $1,200 due the husband from the Switchmen's union.

PEAT BRIQUETTES AS FUEL

Eastern Railroad Experimenting with Compressed Mud as a Substitute for Coal.

The possibility of utilization of millions of tons of peat and the creation of a rival to coal and water power as means of carrying on the business of the world are being completely demonstrated by processes now in use in Lexington. The Boston & Maine railroad is using briquettes of peat in some of its engines on the shorter runs in and out of Boston, and experiments with the new fuel have been pronounced successful. This encourages many persons to believe that a period of non-commercial possibilities is at hand. Watching the operation of the engines that use the peat is the inventor of the apparatus for preparing peat, who believes that he is about to revolutionize the conditions of manufacturing in districts far from coal fields. The story of peat is not new. The fuel has been used for centuries in Europe. In its scientific aspects it has been studied for years in this city. But the results obtained at Lexington, Mass., are most notable. The conditions there are like those of thousands of places in America where vegetable deposits which have accumulated through ages invite the scientist and the promoter to the utilization of coal in a primary process of formation. Beside the southern division of the Boston & Maine railroad and close to the Concord post road is a ready-made source of peat in a soggy mudhole such as may be found in almost every county outside of the arid portions of the United States. It is, perhaps, a little less oozy and quaking than some swamps. In this swamp, according to the estimates of engineers, is vegetable mold enough to make fuel to supply all the railroads entering Boston for 100 years, at the present rate of consumption. It is a vast mine, even though the deposits lie beneath a hole running through the center of the swamp. The bog shows hardly anywhere less than twelve feet of black mud, and at places in the center borings have gone down eighty feet before the hard pan of clay subsoil was reached. A little ditch full of clear water on one side of the swamp reveals that what has been done by the taking out of a few thousand tons. Incidentally it indicates the outcome of this kind of mining. The face of the earth will not be disfigured. The holes in the ground will simply add to the beauty of the country's surface. The peat manufacturing plant at East Lexington has as a chief feature a briquetting house equipped with special machinery into which wet peat is thrown and emerges in the shape of pressed cylinders with a hole running through the center. They are compact and almost as hard as coal after they have been dried under intense heat. A kiln for carbonizing is under construction. The motive power department of the Boston & Maine for several weeks has been trying this fuel on shifting engines and for short local runs. It has been found that the peat briquettes make an exceptionally hot fire and that the cost is less than that of coal, while the smoke coming from the smokestacks. The only disadvantage that has appeared is one that will disappear if the use of the briquette becomes universal. Peat fuel cannot be used with coal in the same locomotive. One kind of fuel must be employed or the other. The peat briquettes have not been tried yet for long railroad runs for the reason that depots of supply would have to be established along the route, since all through trains have to coal up frequently. —New York Herald.

INDIANS AS HUMAN HOUNDS

New Side of the Sport of Shooting Exhibited to Visiting Hunters in Mexico.

Shooting over dogs is nothing uncommon to the ordinary American hunter of the Englishman, but that particular form of sport is not common in Mexico. Recently an Englishman spent a few days hunting in the country and it was left for a hacendado to show him a new style of the sport in a ready-made and well-organized human hounds. On those haciendas where the owner occasionally goes hunting the sport is not taken as seriously as it is by those Anglo-Saxons. Your average Mexican believes in getting enjoyment out of the sport and several experts of the reasonable enough to know that a fair proportion of this sport is lost if he tries himself out as does the average man of the United States or of England. "It was ducks we were going after that morning," said the man who tells the story of the human hounds. "Breakfasted a little earlier than usual, but no hurry was indulged in after that meal. After all one doesn't add to the enjoyment of the day by being too early. A good breakfast ready to start hunting a rooster with a reputation for some speed was driven up and in the smart rig the animal drew we were driven down the road. It was only a mile, but there was no use waiting when we could ride. Arriving at the river where the ducks were expected to be, the hacendado raised his hand and out of the grass there came from somewhere a peon who took charge of the horse. "We began to hunt. For a time there was nothing about the proceeding that was different from what one undergoes in the name of sport in the United States. We crawled through the overhanging bushes looking for the ducks. Occasionally they were seen and then we took our shots and picked up our own ducks—when we got any. We did this for about half an hour and had passed a considerable distance out of sight of the rig in which we had been driven to the river. The hacendado remarked that he thought we had better stop now and take the horses. "He stepped out of the brush and passed down the bank to the road that extended along the river. He whistled, and in less than half a minute a trotted two Indians leading two handsome saddle horses. "We will get on the horses and let these fellows find the ducks for us. No, you had better let him carry that for you, it's too heavy." He was talking about my gun. He was probably afraid I would abandon him if I attempted to ride the horse and handle the gun at the same time. I was willing enough to let the Indian take the sun. He was getting heavy and I couldn't imagine that I would have any use for it if we were not going to hunt. "Those Indians, at a word from the ha-causado, took our places in the brush and began gazing up the river. Parting the twigs and branches as carefully as any pair of dogs they began the search for signs of ducks, while we rode along the path at the foot of the embankment looking for anything but ducks. Suddenly one of the creeping Indians stopped, drew backward out of the bushes and silently signalled us that the ducks were just ahead. The two stealthily crept down the embankment and seized our bridled reins. The hacendado ordered me down and the Indians handed me my gun. We took the places of the men in the bushes and silently signalled us that our shots. The hacendado got his duck. It fell in the water, wounded. As it began floundering toward the opposite bank he signalled one of the Indians, and into the water the man went. No retriever knew what was a little better than he. He half swam and half waded to the side where the duck was wedging in the brush and brought back to us the wounded bird. "The next day we went rabbit shooting. We were accompanied by another Indian. It sounds a little crazy, but that old fellow—he was old—actually seemed to trail rabbits. He would discover the sign of one of the animals and then, with head forward and eyes watching the ground, he would start a zigzag course that invariably would up at some stump of grass or brush from which the animal was started. Occasionally he would stop stock still beside a little bunch of brush, for all the world like a setter dog, and quietly declare that there was a rabbit in it. Look as closely as we would we could see no sign of rabbit, but as the Indian tapped the ground with his foot would run the rabbit."—Mexican Herald.
