Prices for the horse show have been the topic of conversation by many who contemplated going to the show and also a matter of great moment to the directors. Following the desire of a majority of the directors that some popular-priced seats be put on sale for each evening of the show, this plan has been adopted. The entire central part of the Auditorium is utilized as an arena, thus doing away with several thousand seats which are usually available when a show is given in the Auditorium. The cheapest seats at the Louisville show, which precedes the Omaha show and has many of the same horses, will be 75 cents. Boxes are now on sale and may be had from F. S. Cowgill, secretary of the association. The seats go on sale October 2.

The fall season has been quite moist also, causing a slowness in ripening but the entire season has been somewhat more to the advantage of the be paid into the county treasury between farmer, the beets growing large and heavy, meaning a big tonnage per acre, and since the contracts are for a flat price, regardless of the per cent of sugar, over a certain minimum which only the poorest beets de not overtake, the result of the season's growing is probably more in favor of the farmer than of the factory. Candidates for the different offices are keeping their ambitions well covered up, as no effort seems to be put forth by them to secure the nomination. The party seems to be at sea in this county, not even having sent a delegate to attend the state democratic convention. Likewise the erstwhile populist party seems to have been swallowed up by General Prosperity. A call for a populist mass convention was issued to be held in this place last Saturday, but not a party follower appeared upon the scene, and the convention went by default. Neither was this party represented in th state convention. The republican-citizens ticket in this county, which has been a winner for ten years past, promises to continue in the lead.
