

Men's Suits $10 and Overcoats $15

Genteel dressers don't have their clothing made to order any more. Why? Because the materials and workmanship that we put in our $10 and $15 suits and overcoats no custom tailor could give you under $25 and $30. There is not sufficient increased satisfaction in paying the "extra" $10 and $15 to your tailor; our suits and overcoats at $10 and $15 are too good to permit it, besides the cost is so reasonable in comparison that your common sense will not permit you to ignore them. Though these garments are all ready for instant service, they are made by the most skilled tailors in the land.

MURDER CALM AND QUIET

Killing of Rollins Seems to Have Been an Ordinary Affair.

CONTRADICTION BETWEEN WITNESSES

Koslowski Admits Killing the Negro, but Insists He Had to Do It in Self-Defense.

As the testimony is developed in the murder case against Joseph Koslowski, on trial in Judge Day's court, it is making a reputation as a case wherein a man was killed in the quietest manner, for a public killing, probably ever told of in local annals. Koslowski does not deny the killing, but he insists it was done in self-defense. His eyewitnesses give testimony to the same effect, attesting to the assertion that Rollins, the negro who was killed, walked into the saloon with a knife in his hand, stepped up to the bar and reached over to carve Koslowski, who was leaning against the back bar.

defendant. None of them heard Rollins utter a word, they testified, either after he was shot or before, and only one saw him slightly reeling out of the saloon into a small hall.

Joseph Schmidt, who was talking to Koslowski when the killing was done, testified Friday morning that Rollins came in with a knife in his right hand, stepped close to the bar and made a savage lunge at Koslowski; that he then backed away, when Koslowski fired a shot into the ceiling; that then Rollins drew a revolver and pointed it at Koslowski, who fired again and hit his man, and that Rollins then backed out of the saloon in silence.

Heard Threat to Shoot. Schmidt could recall no expression used by the dead man except "My shoe!" when he drew his revolver. Neither Schmidt, Koslowski or the negroes went to examine Rollins or to help him, as the testimony goes, and he was dead in a few minutes. All hands just stood around calmly and without much interest in the affair, with the possible exception of Koslowski. He says after firing the second shot he went to the phone, called up Captain Shields, and told him he had shot a man. Koslowski insists, as does Schmidt, he did not step out from behind the bar at all after the shooting. All the negroes who claimed to have seen anything of the affair swore positively he walked from behind the bar and went and closed the hall door, through which Rollins had reeled.

Straight Conflict of Testimony. One Braden testified that he saw William Watkins, a colored man, take a revolver either from the hand of Rollins or from the floor alongside of him, and Mrs. Braden also said that he saw Watkins go away with the gun in his hand. William Watkins, called in rebuttal, said he did not take a revolver from the hands or clothing of Rollins while he was lying in the hall and that he did not see a revolver. On direct examination Watkins swore he did not go near Rollins at all to search him, and another negro swore that he prevented Braden from touching the body until Captain Shields came. Shields found on the body only a penknife in a coat pocket.

The divergence of testimony is clean cut. Cross-examination, either by the state or of the defense, failed to shake it in any material way. It is so far half a dozen negroes who claimed to have been inside against two whites, who were also inside. One white witness is missing, having left the city.

GIFFIN NOT TO BE CANDIDATE

RUDE SHOCK TO SIMPLE FAITH

Young Southern Girl Destitute, Deserted by Man She Married in Wyoming.

A pitiful story of desertion and destitution came to light Thursday night. This was the story of Rosade Watson, a pretty girl of 17, who left her southern home only three months ago. She lived at Cashers, N. C., and last summer she left the home of her childhood to make a visit in the west. She has lived the last three months at Douglas, Wyo., where she has cousins. While there she visited a fair or carnival, and in the course of it she met a man who follows that business. After three days' acquaintance she married the man, whose name was Husted. He took her with him for a time, while the carnival company was at Cody and Long Pine, and finally they came to Omaha, about three weeks ago. Here he rented her a room with Mrs. Hartzel, 1612 Nicholas street, and went away, saying he would send for her. She had several letters from him, but he has sent her no money.

Thursday her rent expired and she was not allowed to stay any longer. She had not a cent to her name. So, not knowing what to do, she went down to the railroad station to get a place to sleep, thinking thus to escape observation. After all the trains for the night had gone the watchman at the station asked her what she was waiting for, and she told him the pitiful facts of her story. He persuaded her to go to the police station, where she was given quarters in the matron's department. She is full of faith in the man who has left her alone and will not believe that he intends to desert her shamelessly. But the officers, whose experience with such fellows has taught them what to expect, think the chance is very small that she will ever see Husted again.

Announcements of the Theaters. A matinee will be given at the Orpheum this afternoon and this evening when the curtain will ring up at 4:15 sharp the excellent bill that has proven sufficiently magnetic to crowd the house all the week will be brought to a close.

It is announced that W. T. Carleton's production of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," the new patriotic comic opera by Stange and Edwards, authors of "Dolly Varden," will be metropolitan in every respect; that its two magnificent scenes, a famous civil war general's headquarters and an old-fashioned southern homestead on the Mississippi, will be revelations in the art of scenic effects; that its costumes will be models of the modiste's art. This piece will be the attraction at the Boyd for four nights and a Wednesday matinee, beginning on Sunday evening.

"When We Were Twenty-one" will have its last two performances by the Woodward stock company at the Burwood this afternoon and evening. Beginning with the matinee tomorrow "Shenandoah," the great war drama by Bronson Howard, will be the bill.

MILLARD HAS NO PREDICTION

Senator Says on Leaving for Washington Cannot Tell What Congress Will Do.

Senator Millard, accompanied by Miss Millard, left Friday afternoon for Washington for the term of congress which convenes December 4. His private secretary, J. B. Haynes, will leave Saturday. The senator said:

"You ask me what congress is going to do and I must say I do not know. Why, if I knew what congress was going to do I could make a barrel of money. No one knows what congress will do on the rate question. I saw by The Bee that the Nebraska-Iowa Implement Dealers association endorsed the president's stand in very strong terms. Many similar organizations all over the country have done the same, but I cannot tell what will be done. We will hold a meeting of the senate committee which was appointed to investigate interstate commerce affairs Tuesday in Washington. I do not know whether we will take any more testimony on these questions or not."

"I do not think the senate committee on Panama canal affairs will meet until after congress convenes December 4."

"My daughter and I have lived at a hotel in Washington for four years, but this year I have secured a flat in the Connecticut, a large apartment house, where we will keep house and I think we will like it much better."
