Excepting the week of the horse show, last week came nearer descrying to be turned over to the guests of members and called brilliant than any since the opening of the season. The week was not only replete with entertainment, but nearly every day brought some function of more than ordinary pretension that caused the fashionables to shake the wrinkles out of their best frocks and to get their choicest jewels home from the safety deposit vaults. The Bispham concert Thursday evening was, of course, the pre-eminent feature, but the Webster reception Wednesday evening was a close second. Two brilliant buffet lunchcons by Mrs. C. C. Allison and Mrs. James Love Paxton were only a part of the series of smart things extending through the entire week in honor of Miss Marguerite Pritchett, whose marriage to Mr. John L Kennedy takes place this week. Mrs. Frank J. Hoel's tea was another affair that would have been conspicuous, even in a more crowded week, and besides these there were more than a half dozen card parties that would have constituted an eventful week all by themselves.

But it takes more than one brilliant week to make a season, and because society has been rushed for the past six days and has prospect of six more rather busy ones, there is no telling how soon the reaction will set in. The season has been decidedly spasmodic so far. A crush of things has alternated with a dead calm, with a certainty that makes one hesitate to expect, much less predict much. The chances are, however, that there will be plenty doing before the week is over, for the college folks, who have little more than been got- delphia are guests of their parents, Mr. ten rid of, will come trooping back for and Mrs. A. A prevailing fad in handbags was responsible for a little episode the other barrassing side. As the members of a certain kensington club were departing after meeting Mrs. A. discovered that Mrs. X. had carried off her handbag by mistake, and as her purse was in her own she was forced to borrow carfare. A still more serious difficulty a ose when, upon reaching home, she remembered that her key was also in her bug. Finally, with the assistance of the neighbors, she effected an entrance, and after a time, secretly vexed at Mrs. X.'s apparent indifference, she telephoned that lady inquiring for her property. Very much surprised, Mrs. X. replied that she certainly did not have her bag. Lodge, Nebraska City, accompanied by her but was very glad to locate her own, which she had supposed she had exchanged with Mrs. Z. until upon inquiry of that lady she had learned her mistake, and she sug-gested that Mrs. Z. would doubtless be Stoddard of Chicago.
