

CURRENT LITERATURE.

"Yoppy, The Autobiography of a Monkey," by Mollie Lee Clifford, is one of Caldwell's Animal Autobiographical series. The organ-grinder's monkey is familiar to all children, but they only see his life from what seems the bright side, but in this entertaining book it will be found his life is not so bright as his little red coat. At last, however, he reaches his comfortable home again, where he is forever up to mischievous tricks. The H. M. Caldwell company of Boston, is the publisher.

"The Diary of a Bride" is an original and readable book, written with the "fateful seven letters, married," this bride describes her emotions, hopes, joys and fears during the first year of her wedded life. But the book does not keep to the dead level of honeymoon sentimentality. Instead, while there are many little touches of affection it embodies an agreeable dash of humor, a story of home-making, a taste for the unconventional, and, throughout, a rambling vein of feminine reflections on many things which make it thoroughly attractive. The book is published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.

"Sandy," by Alice Heligan Rice, author of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," and "Loverly Mary," is quite the most lovable of her characters to date. We enjoy Mrs. Wiggs philosophy, and we sympathize with Loverly Mary's trials, but, in common with every character in the book, we love Sandy from stowaway to happy bridegroom. A little Irish stowaway, he comes through many adventures to Clayton, a Kentucky town, where Judge Hollis takes him into his heart and home; and here Sandy's Irish heart never warms its devotion to the little aristocrat whom he first sees on the big boat across a great gulf. Young love and loyalty can bridge any gulf, however, and young love and loyalty are themes that have eternal interest. We shall all want to read "Sandy" because we read "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and "Loverly Mary"; we are likely to forget all about Mrs. Wiggs and Loverly Mary under Sandy's fascination. The Century company is the publisher.

"The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," by Anne Warner, author of "Susan Clegg," will add materially to her reputation as a writer of popular fiction. It is the narrative of the adventures of Aunt Mary, another capital creation, in New York, where she is personally conducted by her nephew Jack and his college friends. The humor is irresistible, and a pretty love story runs through the book. With "Susan Clegg" and her friend, Mrs. Lathrop, Anne Warner attained a place in the little circle of American woman humorous writers who have achieved distinction so rapidly within recent years. Many, however, consider her first book "A Woman's Clasp" as her international love comedy, written almost wholly in dialogue, the equal of "Susan Clegg." Little, Brown & Co. are the publishers.

"The House by the River," by Florence Warden, is said to excel in every respect her former work, including "The House on the Marsh," of which about 200,000 copies were sold. The deep and intense interest in this story does not lag in the least, but is carried out until the close of the book. Every reader will imagine what the end ought to be, but nearly everyone will be surprised at the intensely interesting development at the close of the last chapter. It is published by the J. S. Olgive company.

"The Flower of Destiny—An Episode of the Second Empire," by William Dana Orcutt, is the love story of Napoleon III and Eugenie, which is woven into a dramatic little romance. Mlle. de Montijo, of course, is a most fascinating heroine, and the love affair which led up to the crown of violets in the forest at Compiegne had many idyllic qualities. Mr. Orcutt has been very successful in telling the story in a graceful and charming style. The book is very prettily bound in green and gold, and each page bears beautiful illustrations in lavender. The illustrations are by Charlotte Weber.

"The Wine Press," by Anna Robeson Brown, is the story of the shattering of a woman's faith in mankind, and her gradual rehabilitation in her esteem in the person of a strong, upright, young doctor. The story opens in a modern girl college and passed by way of New York bohemia to the New England seacoast. The love passages are more than pretty; they are powerful. The book is neither morbid nor bitter; it is strong. D. Appleton & Co. is the publisher.

"The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia," by Florence Morse Kingsley, is a story which ought to appeal to readers of her former successful book, "The Transfiguration of Miss Philura," as it is along the same lines. The story is a wholesome one, full of quaintness and clever wit. When asked how she came to think of the plot Mrs. Kingsley shivered a little, then laughed. "I dreamed it," she said promptly, "and it wasn't a pleasant dream either. I thought I was told that I had but a year to live. When I awoke I was in full process of reconstructing my life, while beads of anxious perspiration stood out upon my forehead. The impression was so vivid and lasting that I inevitably worked out into the story of Miss Cynthia." Miss Cynthia's one year, however, was extended to many years of happiness. There is a pleasing little romance with several humorous situations that will be much enjoyed. Dodd, Mead & Co. are the publishers.

"Fardners," by Rex E. Beach, is a story of mining life, pointing to the half-humorous, half-serious, but always hearty loyalty among men who have been partners, where there are more hills than homes, and including a touch of the theater in its Klondike guise, and of woman in her moods. So in the collected volume of these stories there is not only a well-rounded view of life in the northwest, but a hearty, humorous view of life in general. Mr. Beach's stories give another instance of the strong, shrewd, agile vocabulary that seems to come easily to men who have lived among mines and ranches, set out to file about them. McCure, Phillips & Co. are the publishers.

"I. N. R. L." by Peter Rosenger, is a novel, even colloquial, account of the life of Jesus supposed to be written by a poor young carpenter in prison and under sentence of death for a crime committed in a rash moment of socialist enthusiasm. It tells of Jesus as a man, living and doing good among men, and this latter-day Evangelist, with its direct and native simplicity of diction, brings the figure of the Saviour vividly near. The illustrations, in four colors, were painted in the Holy Land by Corwin Knapp Linnson. A remarkable feature is Peter Rosenger, German, peasant-born, a sort of modern apostle, who, through his unusual writings about Christ and His Word, has gathered around him a great circle of admirers. His latest book, the great literary sensation of the day in Germany, has for title the four mystic letters that were fixed at the head of the cross. I. N. R. L. McCure, Phillips & Co. are the publishers.
