room on railroads the other day. The correspondent observed that the senator was reading a letter written in a quaint old style, and evidently penned many years ago.

'Once in a while I glance over this old scrap book," sald Senator Clark in explanation of his former remark. "There are some things in here that are worth re-reading.

"To what particular communication do you refer?" I asked. "To the story of the soldier's prayer book," replied the senator. "It is an interesting communication and describes how one Richard Middleton was taken before the mayor of a New England town for playing cards in church. The story is quaintly told by John G. Smith, in his own language. You may be interested in reading it." The correspondent glanced over the communication and herewith reproduces it

One Sunday morning Richard Middleon, a soldier, attended an Episcopal church at an interior town in New England. While the minister was in the midst of his sermon the soldier took from his pocket a pack of cards and spread them out before him. The town marshal, who was present, immediately commanded the soldier to put up the cards and added, "this is no place for one to play cards."

"No matter, put them up," said the marshal. The soldier obeyed. When leaving the church the soldier was again accosted by the marshal who said: Young man, you must come with me." "Where to?" inquired the soldier. "Before the mayor," said the marshal.

"I am not playing cards; I am only ooking at them," the soldier replied.
