BULL FIGHT A SUNDAY SHOW

One of the Popular Amusements of the Mexican Citizens.

FEATURES OF THE AFFAIR AS CONDUCTED

Bull Has No Show from the Start, and His Carcas Goes to Feed the Poor of the Great City.

Almost every citizen of the United States, in spite of their high regard for the institutions of their own and mother countries, and strong respect for the best in human nature everywhere, and honest distaste for cruelty and brutality, outside of our best colleges, go to see the "bull fight" the first Sunday after his arrival in Mexico, and most always offers some apology to his friends for it afterward.

A few never go, quite a number attend but once, while a larger crowd goes because of having been told that "one should see the bull fight while in Mexico, whatever else he missed," and that the "idea of being in the republic of Mexico without seeing a 'fight' was not to be thought of"—in other words, sort of "shamed into going" instead of just going because they wanted to and because of it being a personal affair and from its fascinating history, for it is said to be a fact that if the traveling public—whatever that may mean—would absolutely discountenance the fight, under the rapid development of Mexico and the influx of English and American immigrants, the fight would wane; but I would not like to assume any responsibility when it comes to urging a belief in that statement, for it seems to one who takes the trouble to observe that, next to the "respect for the president," the "love of the fight" is the first thing in the heart of the nation.

External Idea of Bull Fight.

The fight is difficult to describe, and one can get but a vague idea from the written thoughts of another, but imagine, if you please, an arena upon the ground, about which a fence, perhaps six feet high, painted a brilliant red. There are several gates leading into the ring, one for the entrance of the horses, another through which the bulls are driven, and the third for the exit of the mules bearing away the dead animals. Surrounding the arena are seats, one tier above the other, very substantially built, for unlike those of the American circus, they are a permanent thing, as the bull fight bids fair to remain the "national entertainment" for many decades to come. If you can imagine this arena of a bright, sunshiny day, with the seats all taken at $5 and $2.50 each—20,000 of them—you may get an idea.

Now a bull fight must be brutal—there is no other way out of it—a bull cannot be tortured and worried, and finally killed without brutality, and the more tantilising the torture the greater the applause and the better the fight, for the sport is a relic of barbarism and a legacy from Spain, so that the person who attends a session expecting that the bull fight will be conducted upon the mild "drawing room" style of one of our "Indian reviews" or "exhibition battles," had best remain away and read about it, but if they really wish to know, as a matter of discipline to their nerves, just how much they can stand and want to see a real exhibition of what a bull can do when pitted against a "cuaderrilla" of Spanish brutes, all skilled in the arts of the game, they should stimulate themselves with the recollection that the horses used in the ring are worn out anyway and would not bring $2 each at the market, and that death will be a relief to them; and then, there is always some hope that the matador may get caught. Then the dead bulls furnish food for the poor of the city, and the tactics used in bringing about these things are wonderfully skillful. Then, it must never be recorded against the taste of anyone that they enjoyed the "grand entry," for no other act in any of the dramas that serve in their different ways to entertain or amuse a pleasure loving public, is just like this, and no other performance in the world is received by the sport loving public with such wild enthusiasm and appreciative applause as bull fighting.

Formalities of the Ring.

When the hour actually arrives, the procession enters, headed by the arrogant "impresario," in Spanish costume, mounted upon a fine horse, that keeps step to the music; this is the "show horse" and does not appear again.

Next comes the "matadors," whose dignity and bearing are above criticism, for they are the stars of the profession and wear the most gorgeous uniforms. Following them are the "banderrilleros" and "capas," who are the aids to the principals, closely followed by the "picadors," mounted upon the horses that shall carry them into the fight, and more than likely be killed under them by the bull. In the rear comes the "mazos," servants, and mule teams, which constittue all that will take part in the fight. All carry banners and are in brilliant-hued uniform suited to their rank.

The leader, on horseback, approaches the platform and salutes the "chief judge," who among an able corps of helpers, manages and umpires the fight, after which he retires from the ring, accompanied by slow music, and the three "white mules" and the fighters take their places, each waving their banners, and the infuriated bull is let into the arena from the pen, from which he has been coaxed by the throwing of the red "mantillettas" before him, which he follows blindly, and the fight is on.

El Toro and His Position.

The bull has already been maddened in the pen, and as he enters the ring the man at the entrance above him drives a sharp instrument of iron, with a point like a fishhook, into him at the shoulder and adds to his frenzy. This instrument has a wooden handle, to which streamers of ribbon of various colors are attached, making a striking effect. The sight of the red capes, the applauding spectators and general surroundings infuriates the beast and he makes a mad dash for the nearest man, whose skill in dodging is called at once into play, as he jumps aside, while the bull dashes by, only to rush at the next flag with renewed speed and murderous intent. This is called the "capa act" and most of the "toreros" take part and they are given an opportunity to exhibit their expert skill in dodging and to show how easily and gracefully it can be done. After this comes the placing of the "banderrillas" and the crowd, who while applauding to the echo show signs of a waning interest, and the "picador," on horseback, attracts the notice of the bull. As the bull rushes madly at the "picador" he is repelled with a pica, but makes repeated efforts to gore the horse, until some one of the "capas" comes to the rescue, when he abandons the horse and pursues this tormentor, who is one of the aids to the principals.

Part Played by Picadors.

If the picador fails in making a successful defense the horse must take the worst of it, which is nearly always a matter of regret. The bull sometimes attacks the picador from the side, which decreases his chances of safety, and he must rely upon the ingenuity of the capos for his protection if he escapes with his horse. The victorious picador at this crisis is received with deafening applause, but if in a scrimmage the picador is thrown from his horse he must lie perfectly still, while the capas comes to the rescue, and by directing the attack of the bull to themselves they effect the escape of the picador. When a horse is thrown down and gored, but not wholly disabled, it is lashed to its feet and made to undergo another turn about the ring, and many times when disembowled is brought into the ring again, after being rudely stitched together by the "doctors" on the outside, and urged to another bout, and all this for the entertainment of men—and, alas, women.

Sometimes a picador fares badly, too, and must be helped from the arena, but in spite of many vows to the contrary, it is said that they invariably return to the ring. It is in their blood. Sometimes a copa does a pretty turn by kneeling, back turned in front of the bull, but should the beast make for him he would clear the spot with lightning speed. The toreros, often without cape or banderrillas, dance in front of the bull, taking the risk of dancing almost between the horns, where the slightest step would be fatal, just to please the crowd and make an interesting spectacle, and so the sport is continued for half an hour, several horses having been tossed meanwhile, when the bugle sound by order of the lord high executioner is given, and it is understood that one of the matadors must now kill the bull.

Matador Ends the Scene.

This must be done by taking a position in front of the bull and plunging a banderrilla, on the top of the beast's shoulder into the vicinity of his heart. This is one of the most daring feats of the bull fight, and when the matador rushes to the center of the arena and throws his hat to the audience and with banderrilla and flag faces the bull, the applause is at its height. He waves the flag just in front of the bull, the animal makes a plunge for it, when the fighter jumps to one side and, if successful, buries the instrument of torture into the bull, up to the hilt, and he slowly sinks down to rue. Another stroke with a knife, just back of the horns, and the bull is dead, and the howls of delight from the spectators bear witness to their love of the amusement. The fighter bows to the admiring audience, who throw him all sorts of gifts, in testimony of their appreciation of his skill and daring. Then the mules come in and drag out the dead bull and all the horses that have been killed, and one round is declared ended.

The placing of the bandarrilla, which is an instrument of torture twenty-four inches long, and must be stuck into the shoulder from horseback, is considered a very difficult performance, and is accomplished only by those high in the profession, and the horses used in this case are not blindfolded, but are trained to the work and are rarely ever gored, as they are high bred and spirited and know what is expected of them and are ridden barebacked. To succeed in placing a banderrilla while still seated is a daring and skillful feat, and to do this and escape from the position requires not only nerve and agility, but confidence in their ability, and it, of course, calls out loud and prolonged applause.

Other Features of the Show.

One of the most fantastic acts of the fight is where the mules, usually "three white ones," bedecked in ribbons and the national banners, come into the arena, after the matador has dispatched the bull, and triumphantly drags him off, while the "band plays on," and another bull is brought in for slaughter. Unless from three to six bulls and from six to ten horses are killed, and a man or two "touched," the fight is thought tame.

There are rare occasions when a strong and agile bull will leap out of the ring and land in the seats occupied by the spectators. In this case the bull must be shot, but infrequently not before he has gored and trampled upon many helpless people. The imagination will easily supply the sensation caused by a catastrophe like that.

The carcasses of the dead bulls are given to the city for the poor and many of them go to the prison, and many people who go to the fight get some consolation by remembering this, together with the fact that the poor horses ridden by the picadors are blindfolded and do not know what hurts them, while the fact is no honest American should make any excuse to himself nor apology to his friends for seeing a "bull fight" if his own natural delicacy does not furnish the reason, and he should not be branded as a brute if in quest of new sensation or in search of information he gets into a shady seat some Sunday afternoon.

The writer has never seen a "bull fight," but has visited the arena in four different countries, has listened attentively while others have related their experiences and thoughts, has talked it over with both women and men who have been reared to believe it a "grand exhibition of skill and prowess," and has helped to resuscitate women from the "states" who would go, has studied the names and terms used to designate points, as the lovers of base ball do, and the rest is imagination.

CONDITION OF OMAHA'S TRADE

Business of City Enjoys Era of Great Prosperity.

LOCAL BANK CLEARINGS BREAK RECORD

Prices in General Firmly Maintained—Great Rush of Business for Implement Men, with Cars and Goods Scarce.

Nothing better indicates the prosperous condition of Omaha's trade, say the jobbers, than the enormous bank clearings of last week. For the week ending Thursday clearings were $2,000,000 more than for the same week last year, making a new record in the history of Omaha's banking. Tuesday was the large day, with clearing of $2,600,000. It was the annual clearing day for farm sales. Jobbers in all lines report a rush of business last week; house trade and mail orders were both heavy. Prices are being firmly maintained, except for a slight weakness in some lines of cotton goods, and several advances have been made.

Fewer merchants were in the spring meeting last week, most of those who were desirous of coming having already visited the market. Those who were in reported the spring trade opening up well, and say the prospects for the season are good.

The busiest men in the city for the last two weeks have been the implement men. They have been shipping out their spring orders and it will be a week yet before all the first orders have been filled. Two great difficulties have confronted the jobbers, one of them the scarcity of cars and that the other the scarcity of goods. Cars have been harder to get than last year, and the condition has caused considerable delay. Factories are short on goods and are slow in their shipments to jobbers, so that the latter are running exceedingly short in some lines. The dealers report the spring business 40 to 50 per cent ahead of last year, and they expect the later trade to make a record also. Not many country dealers have been in the last week, as they are busy with their trade.

Slight Strength in Shoes.

A normal market is maintained in boots and shoes, with prices at the general level of last week. In certain lines however, there have been slight advances. Trade in leather goods has been good, but in rubber goods it was lighter than ever. The jobbers are getting ready to show their fall samples. Heavy high cut calf shoes will be popular this fall, but patent leather shoes also will be in favor. Even if the hide market should get lower, as some people predict, the jobbers say there is likely to be no decline in shoes, as the stocks in the hands of the manufacturers have been bought at fancy figures. Prices are bound to be stiff all year, they say.

Lent is bringing much pressure on the fish departments of the grocery houses. Men are working day and night packing fish to ship. Prices are firm and stocks in some lines are sadly depleted. Every week there is a slight advance on some kinds of fish, insignificant for one week, but soon amounting to a considerable sum in the aggregate.

Will Tomatoes Be Lower?

There has been no change in the situation on spot tomatoes in the Missouri river territory, but in the east there is a slightly easier feeling and some shading of prices has been done. Yet, even on the basis of the lowest price going in the east today Missouri river prices are still cheaper. The gap between the outside dealers and the syndicate seems to be widening rather than closing up. Evidently the syndicate has been disappointed in finding so much stock available outside of their holdings; still, they seem to have every confidence in the market and that eventually their goods will be wanted at the prices they have established.

Quite a little business has been done in the east on three-pound future tomatoes. There is no disposition on the part of the packers to change their views, as they report that there is very little profit in tomatoes at the present price for futures, when they are paying $8.50 to $9 per ton for the raw material. The prices on futures going today will not admit of a 10-cent price on tomatoes to the consumer. There is one significant fact that should be born in mind—that is, that the price for raw material is pretty nearly 100 per cent higher than the prices paid the growers in years previous to 1905. As a natural consequence of this high basis of price there will be an enormous acreage of tomatoes planted. The inevitable results, with an ordinary yield, will be an unusual supply of the raw material, with consequent lower prices before the season. Well posted buyers are firmly of the opinion that lower prices will prevail on the canned article before the goods are ready for the market.

There is no change to report in corn, much goods being still available at low prices. There is nothing in the situation which justifies the jobber in selling a case of corn below 55 cents per dozen for the poorest quality, and 70 cents for high grade standards.

The demand for gallon canned goods is something unusual. With the possible exception of gallon pumpkin we have seldom seen such a bare market at this season of the year. During the last week gallon apples have seen a further advance and gallon apricots and peaches are more firmly held.

Reports from the Pacific coast indicate that the coming crop of apricots will be exceedingly light. After the bumper crop of last season a light crop might naturally be expected this year. Reports indicate that the trees are not putting out anything like their usual amount of blossoms; some reports say not over 75 per cent of the usual quantity; there is, therefore, an unusually strong feeling both in canned and dried apricots.

Prunes are perhaps the strongest article on the list, with the exception of apricots. Raisins are quiet, a little easier feeling prevailing, but outside of this one article the market shows unusual strength.

Though raw sugars have advanced 3 to 4 cents in the last week, the local jobbers have made no change in quotations. Refiners report a considerable increase in activity in the market.

Owing to the open weather the volume of the winter-made cheese product is greater than last year, and this fact has naturally affected the market. The prices are 1/2@¾c lower than the quotations of the last two or three weeks. The October-made product, however, is very much reduced, and it is hardly probable the lower prices will rule on fancy cheese before the new make is on the market.

The market in coffee is steady and cash quotations are not changed from last week. The month of February saw stocks reduced by 607,000 bags. March 1 the world's supply was 2,000,000 bags less than on the same date last year. The dealers says the steady depletion of stocks will be likely to make higher prices.

With Dry Goods Houses.

Dry goods houses report a good trade, orders from salesmen being satisfactory and orders on the floor numerous, though smaller than has been the rule for several weeks. Retailers in the city for the merchants' meeting say their trade is very good. Lonsdales and similar grades were reduced last week, but other cottons continue strong. The manufacturers reduced Hope bleaches 1/4c and competing lines about as much. There is still some complaint by the jobbers of poor deliveries from the factories, many lines of cotton goods yet being scarce in first hands. Local wholesalers do not look for any reductions.

Paints, Oil and Glass.

An excellent demand has characterized this trade the last week, and as a consequence the market is very firm. Turpentine is up 1c, selling at 78c. Oils, however, are slightly off, the boiled product being quoted at 41c; raw, 39c. It is believed this is merely a temporary recession and that the reaction will be quick. Lead sells at last week's quotations. The glass market has shown no change for the week, the demand being unusually good for both plate and window, with a firmness reported.

The feature of hardware is an advance in builders' hardware. The advance has been 30 per cent since the first of the year. It is due in a large part to the enormous demand caused by building operations all over the country. In other lines prices are unchanged. Orders are being received in large numbers for summer goods, such as refrigerators, ice cream freezers and wire screens. Business is of much larger volume than for the same time last year.

Cotton Market.

NEW YORK, March 10.—COTTON—Spot closed quiet; middling uplands, 11.10c; middling gulf, 11.35c; sales, 2,300 bales.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., March 10.—COTTON—Dull and unchanged; middling, 11c; sales, 226 bales; receipts, none; shipments, 253 bales; stock, 44,929 bales.

LIVERPOOL, March 10.—COTTON—Spot in fair demand; prices 8 points lower; American middling fair, 6.35d; good middling, 6.05d; middling, 5.84d; low middling, 5.65d; good ordinary, 5.50d; ordinary, 5.34d. The sales of the day were 10,000 bales, of which 1,000 were for speculation and export, and included 8,100 American. Receipts, 8,000 bales, no American.

NEW ORLEANS, March 10.—COTTON—Spot closed steady; sales, 1,050 bales; ordinary, 13-16c; low middling, 10c; middling, 10 11-16c; good middling, 11 5-16c; middling fair, 11 9-16c. Receipts, 6,519 bales; stock, 254,807 bales.
