KING OF BOGUS PRIESTS

Death of a Clerical Fraud Who Swindled People on Two Continents.
Edward Donkin, "bishop of Santa Croce of Antioch" and holding several other self-conferred ecclesiastical titles, is dead in London. He was one of the most picturesque small swindlers in the world. For fifteen years he ranged the world from Australia to Milwaukee, obtaining money and getting credit upon his pretensions of ecclesiastical position and great piety. He swindled all the branches of the Catholic church impartially, posing at various times as a priest of the Roman Catholics, the Greek Catholics, the Old Catholics and the Church of England. He worked monasteries by the dozen, and his changes of faith were swifter and more dazzling than those of the vicar of Bray. Yet so pious were his ways and so great was his learning in theology that there remained hundreds of people in England who believed until last year that he was a persecuted and unfortunate holy man. He was exposed in 1895 by Labouchere in London Truth, and a part of his life was made public. At that time he was arrested for obtaining money under false pretenses, but managed to crawl out through holes in the law. Just who Donkin was no one knows. It is said that he was born in England of good family. He appeared first in Australia in the early '70s and entered a Benedictine monastery. He represented himself there as an Oxford master of arts and a Roman Catholic,

The fathers were deceived by his apparent piety and he was taken into the monastery as a novice. He did not remain long, although he seems to have picked up there the foundations of his priestly knowledge which he used afterwards. Just why he left the place has never been told, but it is easy to guess. He was a man of very low life, and many of his campaigns ended with a scandal. In 1883 he appeared in England. Here he made his first change in religion. He represented himself as an Anglican priest and got a curacy in the diocese of Bath and Wells. But he had presented forged credentials and when this was discovered he was deposed. He bobbed up again as a Roman Catholic at Glastonbury. There he asked for admission in a French monastery, representing himself as a young man of fashion who was tired of the world. Things were going well when it was discovered that he had rolled up large debts in the neighborhood on the strength of his connection with the monastery. That ended him there. The monks paid the debts to save the good name of the order. After that he abandoned the church craft for a time and worked Paris as a British nobleman. But a year or two later a party of monks from Downside found him in a Benedictine monastery in Rome. There he was fairly caught and did a term in jail for the frauds which he had perpetrated in the name of the monastery. The details of his American career are not definitely known. He was in New York for a time, but his work there at least escaped the notice of the public. He came to light again when he appeared in Chicago and Milwaukee and obtained from an unsuspecting priest of the Old Catholic church his only real ordination to the priesthood. When he appeared in Milwaukee he represented himself as a "Church of England" priest. The high church clergy of the land missioner, St. Augustine's Priory diocese took him up and he preached in several churches. He is remembered there as an effective preacher. In high church circles this consecrated man with the noble ancestry became something of a rage. He gathered many of his admirers into an ecclesiastical order of his own imagination, known as the Order of the Red Cord. This died out, only those on the inside knew why; and at about that time he met a priest of the Old Catholic church. Donkin professed himself a convert to the Old Catholics and traveled to Chicago at the expense of his new friend to see Archbishop Villatte head of the movement in the United States. "Lord Courtney" was ordained a priest of the Old Catholic church and began his ministrations in Chicago. The graft there lasted longer than usual. It was more than a year before a scandal broke out and the archbishop unrooked him and cast him out. He moved on to Cleveland. There he founded an independent Catholic church and did well. But there was another scandal. He was arrested, escaped conviction and sailed for Rome. This was in 1882. At about the time Labouchere started in on him and published a very fair summary of his record, which created a sensation in England. He was arrested for the draft operation, but he had managed it so cleverly, what with a trip to Paris and the complication he had worked into the deal and his testimony on the stand was so clever that he was acquitted. Nevertheless, his name became known all over England as the king of priestly swindlers. What he had been doing between the trial and his death no one seems to know—New York Sun.

Lumber Traffic in Northern California.
The huge lumber traffic of northern California, Oregon and Washington is a great asset of American prosperity. Annually for the last three years more than 1,000,000 feet of redwood, pine and fir have been taken from these almost inexhaustible timber tracts and shipped to California coast points and more than 20,000,000 feet sent abroad.
