SWORDS OF NOTED WARRIORS

Historic Weapons Carried by Eminent Officers of the Army and Navy. TROPHIES IN THE NATIONAL MUSEUM

Relics of Grant, Sherman, Hancock, Shields, Paul Jones and Dewey—Souvenirs of All the Wars of the Republic. The national collections in Washington contain a most interesting and brilliant array of American swords, which were either carried by military and naval officers, presented by congress to victorious leaders, or purchased from the families of heroes and given to the nation as a lasting tribute to their fame. Four of General Grant's swords are in the possession of the National museum. The first, known as the "Sword of Chattanooga," was presented to him by citizens of Jo Davies county, Illinois. It has a gold pommel, with grip guard and guard plate ornamented with tortoise shell, and inscribed "The Hero of the Mississippi." The scabbard, also of gold, is engraved with the names and dates of the battles of the Mexican war in which General Grant was engaged, and also of the battles at Belmont, Black River bridge, Vicksburg and Chattanooga.

The "Sword of Donelson" was General Grant's favorite tribute to his valor. When the right wing of his army was attacked by the confederate troops at Fort Donelson, one of his officers, observing that the soldiers' haversacks were filled with rations, reported the fact to the general, adding: "They have come out prepared to fight for several days." Grant replied: "This means retreat, boys. Soldiers don't fill haversacks like this unless they are planning to run away. Now, then, one more sharp attack and we'll finish the fight." After it had become apparent that success would crown Grant's arms General Buckner inquired on what terms he would accept his surrender. To this Grant replied: "Unconditional surrender are my only terms," and soon afterward his army took possession of the fort. In honor of this victory the "Sword of Donelson" was presented to General Grant by Messrs. G. W. Graham, C. C. March, C. W. Lagout and John Cook. Its straight edge is etched with military trophies. The pommel is carved with bas-reliefs. The grip of carved ivory and the gold-plated scabbard is engraved with Grant's name and the names of the donors.

A Spanish Weapon. The fourth of Grant's swords, a Spanish weapon, was presented to him in 1873 by the Republic of Spain. It has a guard of steel, ivory grip and steel scabbard, ornamented in gold. On the hilt are inscribed the following words: "Belmont, Donelson, Shiloh, Vicksburg, Mission Ridge, Spottsylvania, Richmond. Let us have peace. U. S. G. Fabrico de Toledo, 1874." While on the hilt is the inscription, "E pluribus unum." There are also on exhibition four swords commemorating the victories of General Winfield Scott Hancock, who was especially conspicuous at the battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg, and as the leader of the Second Army corps in the campaign of the Army of the Potomac. They are: (1) the sword which he carried through the civil war; (2) the sword of Captain Edward Johnson, given to him by the citizens of Virginia for service in Mexico and presented by Captain Johnson to General Hancock; (3) the sword which was presented to him at Ft. Fisher, Va., in 1862; and (4) his regulation sword, which he carried as major general. Three generations of the Capron family are represented in the nation's collection of swords. Captain Erasmus Allyn Capron distinguished himself in the Seminole war, and later served on the Canadian frontier. In 1847 he served in the Mexican war and was engaged in the siege of Vera Cruz and in the battle of Cerro Gordo. He also fought in the battles of La Hoya, Oka Laka and Contreras. He was killed at the battle of Churubusco, August 25, 1847, while storming the strongly entrenched convent, which served as a citadel. His sword with white leather blade and plate was deposited in the museum by his daughter.

Relic of the Last War. Captain Allyn Capron, his son, who served with distinction in the Mexican and Sioux campaigns, and later in the Spanish war, to Cuba, and to the Capron battery was assigned the duty of firing the salute in honor of the victory at Santiago. He contracted a fever in Cuba, which led to his death later at Fort Myer, in Virginia. Many interesting relics of this brave man are in the National museum, including his regulation artillery sword, belt and breast-plate. Captain Allyn K. Capron, son of Captain Allyn and grandson of Captain Erasmus Allyn, was one of the earliest victims of the Spanish war. He enlisted in the cavalry and served in the Spanish war, and was commissioned second lieutenant in the Fifth Infantry. When the Spanish war broke out he was appointed a captain in Roosevelt's Rough Riders, and was killed on his last battle while leading the advance at La Guasima, Cuba. The relic of this officer in the museum consist of fourteen objects. Much space would be occupied in a detailed description of the relics of General William Tecumseh Sherman, of General John Shields, whose gallant services in the Mexican and civil wars are still fresh in the minds of many; of Commodore Jesse Duncan Elliott, who captured two British vessels at Fort Erie while serving under Perry, or of Commodore James Biddle, whose first lieutenant in the war of 1812 fell in battle by capturing six British merchantmen conveyed by the Frolic, and was also conspicuous in the Tripoli war (1801-1805), the war of 1813 and the war with Mexico. Special mention should be made of the naval cutlass which John Paul Jones, once known as the "Baron of the Seas," captured from the English ship Serapis. The collection also contains the sword which was presented to that indomitable fighter by the king of France, as well as a sword, musket and piece of the flag from the Serapis, together with the entire flag of his own ship. Among the relics are the sword of General Galbraith Perry, brother of the hero of Fort Erie, who captured the British merchantman the Concord at Alexandria in 1812.

Dewey's Famous Sword. The handsome sword which congress voted to Admiral Dewey for his victory over the Spanish fleet in Manila bay, May 1, 1898, was exhibited in the National museum, together with the sword which was presented to him by the city of Boston, but they have been withdrawn, temporarily at any rate, much to the disappointment of many visitors. The former of these two swords is composed entirely of twenty-two carat gold, with the exception of the steel blade and the body metal of the scabbard. On the pommel is carved the name of the battleship "Olympia," and the sodical sign for December, the month in which Admiral Dewey was born. Circling these is a wreath of oak leaves, the standard decoration for rank. Below this is a gold collar, the ends of which are attached to the United States with the blue field of the shield in enamel, and below them are the arms of Vermont, the admiral's native state, with the motto, "Freedom and Unity," and the colors of the shield in enamel. Stars decorate the plain portion of the collar and a graceful scroll, the latter part of the hilt by a narrow band of oak leaves. The grip is covered with fine shark skin, bound with gold wire and inlaid with gold stars. The guard consists of a conventional eagle, terminating in a claw clasping the top, indicating "control and confidence," the outspread wings forming the guard proper. The scabbard is of this steel, damascened in gold with sprays of Ros marinus, a delicate sea plant, signifying fidelity, constancy and remembrance. The sword blade is damascened with the inscription: "The gift of the nation to Rear Admiral George Dewey, U. S. N. in memory of the victory at Manila bay May 1, 1898." The mounting of the belt and the trappings are the regulation buckles, pierced side rings and swivels, all of twenty-two carat gold and ornamented with oak leaves and acorns.

The visitors to the museum will also be interested in the relics of Lieutenant David Jameson and General Jacob Brown, who distinguished himself in the battles of Chippewa, Erie and Niagara in 1814; of Brigadier General E. V. Ripley, newly elected President of Dartmouth college, for his brave services at Niagara. Attention will also be drawn to the more recently added swords of General Kilpatrick, Brigadier General John Wynn Davidson, General George W. Morgan and Ransom Clark, who alone escaped death in the massacre of the "Red Bank" command of 171 men near Wahoo swamp during the second war with the Seminoles Indians (1835-1845). Added to all of these are several swords and other weapons which were picked up on battle fields and which, although unlabeled, serve as silent witnesses to the names of many noble lives in defense of their country.—Washington Star.

OUT OF THE ORDINARY. The pure food bill pending in congress provides that a pound shall mean sixteen ounces of a given article, exclusive of the packaging. Andrew J. Harlan of Savannah, Mo., is the last survivor of the Thirty-first congress, having represented the Second Indiana district. Although 81 years old, he is still in the vigor of his old age. Among the members in this congress were such names as Daniel Webster, John C. Calhoun, William H. Seward, Stephen A. Douglas, Jefferson Davis and John J. Crittenden. Congressman Higgins of Connecticut says the queerest sight he ever saw in his life was the funeral of a man who died in the most difficult course in higher mathematics, went later with General Sherman to the University of North Carolina and is now working for the degree of M. A. at Harvard. Here he is taking the degree of M. A. in the sciences in the curriculum, Gothic and Anglo-Saxon. Who first found tin? There is legend among the Cornish miners that St. Piran, an Irish hermit, was the discoverer. His name is given to the tin mines in Cornwall, in Cornwall, laid bare of sand by the sea, many years ago, has recently been re-discovered. Cornish miners still keep the Feast of St. Piran, who, according to the fable, first found tin, forgetting that their forefathers had once previously sold it to the Phoenicians. Possibly the legend points to the fact that this Irishman was a skillful metallurgist. Six red-haired tallest men, who had been accepted by the state in the selection of a jury to try Sacco and Vanzetti, charged with the murder of a fellow Italian, were excluded by Judge Goodhart, attorney for the accused, in the Waterbury superior court at Derby, Conn. Mr. Goodhart held that the six red-haired men were ineligible for the jury because they were of the same race as the accused. The jury was composed of men of many complexions and from the various nations of the world. Mr. Goodhart all have red whiskers, also of the same variety. Four of them are farmers.
