HUNTING MAN-EATING TIGERS

Dangers Faced by Sportsmen Seeking Big Game in Indian Jungles.
Men who have shot the "big cats of the Indian jungle" all emphasize the difference between an "ordinary tiger" and a "man-eater." One varies from the other as much as a condorist puffs from a wildcat. The man-eater when it catches sight of a hunter is at once all adame with the passion to devour him. It has tasted human flesh and knows its sweetness.
When the Britisher in India goes off tiger hunting, therefore, he looks first of all to his own safety. Having learned that a tiger rarely looks upward, he seeks a position at some distance from the ground, as, for instance, the howdah of an elephant, or a machan, or leaf-covered box, perched in a tree.
The tiger usually keeps its eyes on the ground because it finds its prey there and its enemies also. The natural inhabitants of the trees, the birds and the monkeys, it holds in contempt. But on the ground, besides the sweet-fleshed man, lives the water buffalo, its most formidable foe. In combat the buffalo most times kills the tiger.
The peculiar sagacity of the elephant is of great assistance to the man who hunts tigers from the howdah. At the approach of the big cat, the pachyderm trumpets an alarm, and if properly trained it will snatch its master with its trunk, should he be on the ground, and lift him into the howdah on its back. It then seeks the shadow of some tree and stands perfectly still, as if knowing that in this way it will steady the hunter's aim.
Yet, when neither the howdah nor the machan is available, the tiger hunter will seek the shelter of only a steep, high rock. A captain of the Indian army recently killed a huge man-eater, with only a rock for refuge.
"The very evening that I saw the beast," he said, in telling his adventure, "the creature had devoured a woman returning to the village with a bundle of wood she had cut in the jungle. Only an anket and some locks of hair were left to tell of her fearful fate. The villagers called me foolish for trying to kill the brute, for they said he would prove too cunning. Man-eaters, they said, were far more cunning than tigers that had never tasted human flesh. After they had sacrificed to their god, however, they became more hopeful. The hunters went out to drive him toward me. It seems most likely he was lying under a great banyan tree not very far away. Meantime I perched myself on a

Better See Us

The juicy, steaming roast is the main attraction of a good dinner. The meat must be well cooked, but first it must be well cut. At this market you will find the choice of the choicest. We take great pains to please each individual customer, whether his orders are large or small. Our customers leave well satisfied at all times when leaving their orders at our discretion, that we will cut, trim and send home ready for the fire the primest, choicest, tenderest and juiciest beef, lamb, mutton or pork.
