MADAME CURIE GETS A PLACE

Wife of Famous French Physicist Will Be Lecturer at Sorbonne.

PARIS. June 3 - (Special Cablegram to The Bee.)-Madame Curle, widow of Pierre Curie, who was killed lately in a street accident, has been appointed to succeed her husband as lecturer on physical science at the Sorbonne. This is the first time that woman has obtained so important a post in public education. The high council of the Faculty of Sciences of Paris made the nomination unanimously, and the directing council of the university ratified it at once. M. Briand, minister of public instruction, immediately signed the appointent, which he not only approves, but had himself originally proposed.

Madame Curie enjoys the universal esteem of the scientific world. The discovery of radium was due jointly to her husband and herself, but the first researches which led up to it were made by her when, with M. Bacquerel, she was investigating the properties of uranium. Her thesis when she took the degree of doctor of science was on radio activity. She mar ried Pierre Curie shortly afterwards, and both continued their researches in the same field, first discovering polonium-thus named by M. Curie because his wife, nee Sklodovaka, is a Pole-and then the world famous radium. A professorship of physical science was endowed specially for M. Curie, and no better successor could have been found for him than his widow. She has been appointed for the present only lecturer, but will certainly be promoted to full professor

It will be remembered that Pierre Curie refused the Cross of the Legion of Honor because it was not offered for his wife also. Madame Curie is as retiring as was her husband, and is wrapped up in her work and in her two children. Pierre Curie and his wife, when he died, were, it is believed, on the road to some fresh great discovery, which Madame Curie may be expected to carry through.

An old soldier, released from coffee at 72, recovered his health and tells about it as follows: "I stuck to coffee for years, although it knifed me again and again.

'About eight years ago (as a result of coffee drinking which congested my liver), I was taken with a very severe attack of malarial fever.

"I would apparently recover and start about my usual work only to suffer a relapse. After this had been repeated several times during the year I was again taken violently ill.

"The doctor said he had carefully studied my case and it was either 'quit coffee or die, advising me to take Postum in its place. I had always thought coffee one of dearest friends, and especially when sick, and I was very much taken back by the doctor's decision, for I hadn't suspected the coffee I drank could possibly cause my waiting room door.

"I thought it over for a few minutes and finally told the doctor I would make the change. Postum was procured for me the same day and made according to directions; well, I liked it and stuck to it, and suggest that a reference is necessary." since then I have been a new man.
