DAILY NEWS FAKE FIZZLES

Yellow Journal's Alleged "Confession" Exploded and Both Parties Discharged.

REAL LIAR NOW STANDS UNCOVERED

Reporter Who Manufactured the Canard Makes Miserable Mess as Witness Trying to Justify His Baseless Yarn.

Yellow journalism has had its trial and has been convicted—convicted of faking.

The Daily News reporter who conjured up the "confession" of Mrs. Frank E. Wheeler that James Diggs murdered her husband, after bluffing and blustering, after giving the lie to the county attorney's office, as well as to a reputable newspaper, was given a chance before Judge Crawford of the police court to make good and he failed ignominously; in other words, after a thorough investigation, his alleged "confession" was not only proven to be a high-handed fake, but both Mrs. Wheeler and Diggs were discharged for want of evidence to warrant a conviction.

At 1:05 Thursday afternoon Police Judge Crawford discharged James Diggs, colored, and Mrs. Dora Wheeler, charged with the murder of Frank E. Wheeler, whose body was found on South Fourteenth street on the evening of February 23. Deputy County Attorneys Fitch and Shotwell, for the state, placed on the stand over a dozen witnesses to establish the relations of Diggs and Mrs. Wheeler, the movements of Diggs on the evening of the murder and the possible motive for the crime, while Attorney W. W. Dodge, representing the defendants, called only Matron Gibbons of the city jail for the defense. Neither Diggs nor Mrs. Wheeler took the stand. The case was submitted without arguments. Deputy County Attorney Fitch urged that the defendants be held to the district court.

Faker on the Stand.

One of the features of the trial was the testimony of Harry Wilkinson, reporter for the Daily News, who reiterated an alleged confession said to have been received by him from Mrs. Wheeler on the morning of February 26 in the matron's department. Without referring to the credibility of the alleged confession the police judge declared that the confession must not be considered against Diggs, and, if it be true, it would merely indicate the feelings of the wife for her murdered husband at the time. The police judge further said in giving his decision that the only scintilla of evidence offered by the state was the attempt of the detectives to connect Diggs' shoes with footprints found in the soil near the scene of the murder, and the visit of Diggs to the Millard hotel engine room the day before the murder. Judge Crawford declared it would be the height of folly to put the county to the expense of a jury trial on such evidence as that brought before him.

Matron Gibbons repudiated in part the yellow journal confession offered by the state.

The court room was crowded to suffocation. The case was taken up about 9:30 and lasted until after 1 o'clock. It proved the most interesting case of the kind to be heard in the police court for many years.

No Evidence from the First.

At the time of the murder of Frank E. Wheeler, James Diggs and Mrs. Wheeler were arrested on suspicion of having been parties to the crime, Diggs being supposed to have been the person who dealt the fatal blow. The matter was brought before the grand jury then in session, but for want of evidence the prisoners were discharged. A few days after the crime the junior yellow printed an alleged confession, said to have been secured from Mrs. Wheeler by one of its reporters. Last week Miss Ira Wheeler, sister of the murdered man, arrived from Kansas and began proceedings to reopen the case, with the alleged confession and the aforementioned junior yellow in the spotlight. With the junior yellow printing a tirade of scurrilous attacks on the county attorney's office and insinuating that the other newspapers were trying to shield Diggs and Mrs. Wheeler because they had been beaten on a "scoop," (meaning the alleged confession), the county attorney was finally prevailed upon to try the case in the police court to satisfy all interests and to clear the office of the aspersions that it had not performed its full duty in the premises. The result was that the preliminary hearing was set for Thursday morning, when the case was tried with nearly all of the state's full strength. The decision of the judge came with much force on those who wanted to see fair play all around and yellow journalism exposed in its night garments.

Confidence of Defense.

The fact that Attorney Dodge, for the defendants, was content to rest his case on the evidence of Police Matron Gibbons, who testified only to the alleged confession, showed the confidence of the defense.

Harry Wilkinson took the stand and repeated what he declared Mrs. Wheeler told him in the matron's department on the morning of February 26. Wilkinson said he went into the matron's department ostensibly to see an old woman named Mrs. Dillon and while in the room held conversation with Mrs. Wheeler.

"I first told Mrs. Wheeler that Diggs had fully confessed and had implicated her," said the witness.

The statement that Diggs had confessed was in itself a deliberate lie, as everyone about police headquarters affirmed.

Then Wilkinson said Mrs. Wheeler told him that she had begged Diggs not to kill her husband, that she knew he went to the Millard hotel engine room to get a look at Wheeler, and furthermore she had warned her husband about the matter and had arranged to move to Colorado. Wilkinson also said the Wheeler woman told him that Diggs intended to kill her husband that he might receive part of the insurance carried by Wheeler in favor of his wife.

Questioned in regard to the circumstances under which he secured the alleged confession the witness said he was positive the matron went into the east room while he spoke to the prisoner and that he and the woman were at a table during the "confession."

Mrs. Gibbons Riddles the Lies.

Matron Gibbons, the only witness for the defense, was called by Attorney Dodge.

After relating the summary ejectment of the yellow journalist from the matron's department Mrs. Gibbons said she was not further than ten feet any time during the presence of Reporter-Witness Wilkinson. She said:

"Wilkinson came in to see Mrs. Dillon, an old woman who was in need of pecuniary assistance and whom the reporter had been in the habit of seeing from day to day. While he was in the room I showed two women to a retiring room and did not go further than ten feet from the reporter. I heard him tell Mrs. Wheeler that Diggs had confessed and heard the woman reply: 'Well, if he is the guilty man I hope he will be punished.' Of course, while I was a few feet away Mr. Wilkinson might have said more, but I don't think he did."

At the time of the fake confession Matron Gibbons was closely questioned by a reporter for The Bee and she was positive that all Wilkinson exchanged with the woman were the words mentioned in the matron's testimony. Mrs. Wheeler at that time and since positively denied making any such confession to the Daily News reporter. Even under the most approved methods of "sweating" prisoners the police were unable to get anything from the woman which might have implicated either herself or Diggs in the murder.

Fake Must Not Be Considered.

In giving his decision Police Judge Crawford referred to the "alleged confession," saying:

"Mr. Wilkinson's alleged confession must not be considered against Diggs, in that he was not present at the time it was said to have been secured. The confession, if it be considered at all, would only show the concern of Mrs. Wheeler for her murdered husband. The relations between Diggs and Mrs. Wheeler have been shown and some probable motive established, but aside from the facts that Diggs' shoes seemed to have fitted into tracks found near the scene of the murder and that Diggs had a friendly conversation with Wheeler at the Millard hotel there is not a scintilla of evidence to warrant me binding the defendants over to the district court."

When the decision was announced friends of the accused attempted a demonstration, which was quickly suppressed by the police.

Movements of Diggs.

The testimony regarding the movements of Diggs on the evening of February 23 was confusing at the best. Mr. Garrell said he went to church at Twenty-fourth and Grant streets, arriving at the house of worship about time for service, which was 8 o'clock. He said Diggs had not been away from the place more than once, then for fifteen minutes, since 6 o'clock. The body of Wheeler was found at 7:20 by George Welch and was then warm. Mrs. Garrell was sadly mixed regarding her recollection of time. Her testimony was of no value. Guy Stevens, garbage hauler, said he saw Diggs at Thirteenth and Leavenworth streets a few minutes after 6 o'clock that evening. Several witnesses testified Diggs called at the Millard hotel engine room on the afternoon of the day before the murder. One said Diggs and Wheeler held a friendly conversation for half an hour.

Among the interested spectators in the court were Miss Ira Wheeler, sister of the murdered man, and C. L. Shamp, secretary of the local union of stationary firemen.

Two detectives of the city jail went on the stand and tried to establish a connection between the shoes Diggs wore on the evening of February 23 and shoe prints found in the soil near the spot where Wheeler's body was found. When asked to produce the shoes for evidence they were unable to say where the shoes were. The other witnesses merely testified as to the finding of the body and their acquaintance with Diggs and Mrs. Wheeler.

In the main the evidence was substantially the same as published in The Bee at the time of the murder.

Diggs Out on Bond.

After being released by the police judge James Diggs muttered a few uncomplimentary remarks in the direction of Steve Maloney, one of the plain clothes squad at the city jail, for which offense Maloney arrested Diggs on the charge of disorderly conduct. Diggs was immediately released on a cash bond. Maloney was one of the witnesses against Diggs.

at the disposal of the three monarchs for personal communication it is possible that personal pledges covering certain contingencies may have been exchanged.

The Rech, which joints in the appeal to Parliament not to take a step which might seem to warrant the government in asserting that Parliament is attempting to usurp the executive power, says that if the government adopts the desperate expedient of calling in foreign troops to put down a civil war the result will not be the same as in 1849, when a Russian army saved the Hapsburg dynasty. The paper declares that the people will rally under the banner of Parliament as they did in England under that of the English Parliament at the time of Charles I, with probably a similar result, namely, the loss of the king's head.

At a caucus of the constitutional democratic party today before the proposed address to the people came up for its second reading in the lower house of Parliament a hopeless split developed. The moderate faction, which included practically the entire central, or steering committee, tried to induce its followers to vote against the address. Prof. Milukoff and others vainly appealed to M. Vinaver, who headed the insurgents, insisting that the party would be wrecked if it failed to keep abreast of the radical sentiment of the country. In the lobbies of the house the sole topic of speculation was the possible dissolution of Parliament. The prevailing conviction was that the government abandoned the idea of a compromise when it was found that it was not a question of the substitution of men, but principles, and a number of those present ventured to predict that tomorrow may see the Tauride palace in the possession of the troops.

Talk of Universal Suffrage.

COLOGNE, July 19.—The Gazette's correspondent at St. Petersburg asserts, as on reliable authority, that the Russian government has agreed in principle to dissolve Parliament and order new elections on the basis of universal and direct suffrage. The reason given is that Parliament is exceeding its prerogatives. The correspondent adds that if there should be an outbreak of a revolutionary movement the government has decided to establish a dictatorship.

VIENNA, July 19.—The report published in St. Petersburg that under certain conditions Austria would assist in suppressing a revolution in Russia is denied here.

City of Syzran is Burning.

SAMARA, July 19.—The latest news from Syzran is that the government buildings and treasury are on fire and the panic-stricken inhabitants have sought refuge in the surrounding woods and forests.

Landlord Tells of Losses.

MOSCOW, July 19.—A landlord fleeing from Biobrov, in the province of Voronezh, where a peasant uprising has taken place, has arrived here and gives a frightful picture of the devastation.

He describes the losses in the provinces as colossal. The troops are powerless to cope with the peasants, who are marching in large bands, destroying practically everything. Not more than one-tenth of the estates are spared. Upon approaching a village the advance detachment of the peasants enters and announces it is being pursued by 4,000 troops with machines and asks for support. The villagers thereupon join the rioters and the procession moves on. The movement was started by the refusal of the landlords in the northern part of the Bobrov district to agree to an advance of wages to the farm women. The ripening crops are not being harvested.

Socialists to Help.

LONDON, July 19.—At the closing session today of the socialist and labor interparliamentary committee it was resolved to issue national appeals for funds to assist the Russian revolutionists, and the socialist and labor representatives at next week's conference of the interparliamentary union were urged to take action in support of the Russian Parliament "in its fight against absolutism."
