Western League Offers Inviting Field for Inventive Genius.

ANCHOR FOR PITCHERS IS BADLY NEEDED

Magnates Unable to Replace Men Taken by Big Lengues on Draft Last Year Despite Their Hustling.

Good opening Some inventive genius has a chance to earn a competence and do Western league managers a service of incalculable value just now. All he has to do is to devise an anchor or sinker, or semething of the sort that will hold a pitcher to the ground, or at least prevent him from going out of sight when he does go up. The last week witnessed some of the most disastrous ascensions ever recorded in the history of the game. Omaha pitchers furnished two of them. This has been one of the features of the Western this season that has not been greatly reliahed by the bugs. Accustomed as they have become to seeing the very best of pitching, it has been a trifle wearlsome to watch some of the performers in the box. The managers have not been responsible for this, as it is the natural result of the raid made on the league by the big leagues under the draft last fall. Omaha was cleaned up, so was Des Moines, Denver and Sloux City, and for that matter the Class A teams in general were riddled by the big teams. When spring came there was mighty little left for the Western managers, and they had to be content with what they could get. Des Moines has two pitchers, Miller and Cicotte; Omaha has two, Sanders and Mc-Neeley; Denver has one, Engle; Lincoin has one, Eyler; Pueblo has two, Minor and Stimmell, and Sloux City has none. It would take a column to give the names of the experiments the several managers have tried, hoping to get on a live one, but nothing has showed up yet. It's a bit hard, but we have to bear it. In the meantime Papa Bill will pay some good simoleons for at least two more pitchers who can keep their feet below the roof of the will be held August 13, or one week be grandstand through nine innings of base

Some of the eastern sporting editors affect to scoff at the renewed story of a base ball trust. The progress of events mean nothing to them.
