Both conventions were devoid of factional strife and marked by no contesting spirits. Cargressman Smith made an address, in which he did not mention the name of Commins, but made it pfain he was not in sympathy with "early" ravision of the tariff. He depied being an aspirant for the senate and pronounced Senator Allison most potent factor in public life today.

Takes Up that Tariff Talk. the course of his address he said: I have not even heard it contended by

I have not even heard it contended by those who believe in the early revision of the tariff that congress should have turned aside from these measures to which I have referred until they were disposed of to deal with the tariff question.

As the truth is unchangeable, so the fundamental principles of republicantsm are enduring. The republican party has slways believed and now believes in the protective system. Its fidelity is, however, to the principle rather than to any given schedule or rate, and it has always recognized that the rates and schedules must from time to time be modified, especially to meet changes in the relation of foreign and domestic markets, but it believes that when such changes are made they should be with the principles of protection constantly in mind. In my ewn opinion a general revision of the tariff will not take place until after the next presidential election, and I will tell you why.

These details necessary to a revision of the tariff content of the next presidential election, and I will tell you why.

These details necessary to a revision of the tariff-can only be obtained from long and laborious hearings of witnesses upon all sides, and the result has been, as I have stated, that it has always in recent years been impossible to complete a revision except after many months of labor. Certainly no one will claim that congress was not busy at the last session or that it should have taid aside the important measures it was considering to take up the revision of the tariff, which, as I have explained, would have consumed the entire session; and probably more. The next session; and probably more. The next session of congress will nominally be about ninety days in length, but in reality only about seventy days in length, but in reality only about seventy days in length, exclusive of Sundays and holldays. This session cannot be extended beyond the fourth day of next March, because the terms of office of all the members expire on that day.

In this assembly of my friends I deem it my duty to say a word personal.

When I was chosen your representative in congress Senator Dolliver was just entering upon his new duty in the so-called upper house of congress. He has now served in that body six years, and when the rate hill had been conducted in safety through the seenate.

For meaths he was its steady and con-through the senate.

For menths he was its steady and constant advocate. His association with that struggle and with the final passage of the bill will carry his name into the permanent history of his country if nothing else does. The weary months dragged on and while there was not a great difference of opinion as to the passage of the bill, there were ireconcilable differences as to details. Finally William B. Allison was called from his absorbing labors in charge of the appropriations of congress and, with a ripe experience of more than forty years in the congress of the United States, reconciled all differences and expedited the bill to its final passage.

The manner in which he thus adjusted The manner in which he thus adjusted these differences was but characteristic of the man. He was elected to congress in 1862 and has, with the exception of two years, been in the house and senate during the entire period since. Newspapers may talk about the power of Aldrich, but William B. Allison is not only the most powerful man in the senate, but in my judgment the most potential man in American public life. All the power of a great president and a great administration could not pass the rate bill until the valuable services of William B. Allison were enisted in the struggle. The four men in the United States most entitled to credit for this measure are Theodore Rooseveit, William B. Allison, J. P. Dolliver and William P. Hepburn, three of the four from lowa.

I am deeply grateful that any of my constituents deem me fit for the senate, but in view of the action of these conventions I think I ought to say to you that I am not an aspirant for a seat in the senate.

I have sought a re-election, first, because hase differences was but characteristic of have sought a re-election, first, because I have sought a re-election, first, b-cause I hoped in a small way, if returned, to b-able to serve the country and to serve you, and, second, because I have always found my chief gratification in the fact that the nominations were made apparently with a quite general consent of inrepublicans of this district. So long as that feeling exists it is my hope and my desire to represent you in congress, but no longer.

desire to represent you in congress, but no longer.

The republican party in Iowa has in the past few months had within it a somewhat bitter contest, which now draws to a close, but if we will all remember that before we are republicans we are Americans and before we are lowa republicans, we are members of the great national republican party, patriotically struggling under the leadership of President two velt for the welfare of all the people, and that before we belong to any element or faction of the party we are Iowa republicans. I trust and believe that when the excitement of this preliminary struggle is over we will all be found united, after the August convention, in support of the republican state and local tickets.

Roosevelt and Smith Endorsed. The candidates adopted the following resolutions:

The republicans of the ninth congressional district of lows, in convention assembled, recognize in President Roosevelt, our courageous and fearless leader, those high qualities of manhood and statesmanship, which characterize him as the highest type of the American citizen. His sincerity of purpose and persistent activity in behalf of all the people mark him as one of America's greatest presidents and a fit person to guard the rights and shape the dealiny of the republic, and we hereby heartily endorse his administration.

We recognize in Hon Watter I. Smith a man of highest worth and sterling integrity, and we fully endorse his labors in assisting to place upon the statute hooks of the nation, those wise and spoch-making laws which were enacted in the recent session of congress, and which are of such vital importance to the people of of such vital importance to the people of the United States. With full faith in his integrity and ability, we take great pride in again presenting him to the voters of the finth congressional district, as a man entitled to their confiednce and support.

TENNIS TOURNAMENT AT LONGWOOD

Eighteen of the Twenty-nine Contests Carried to Extra Sets.

Carried to Extra Sets.

BOSTON, July 24.—Losig hard-fought matches ruled today in the tennis tournament at Longwood. Of the twenty-nine contests in singles, eighteen we've carried to extra sets, while in the match between R. Leroy and A. Stillman sixty-two games were necessary before the former won his place in the second round.

A continuation of the moist conditions made the courts still quite heavy and a number of the players were seemingly affected by the uncertain footing, although the turf was remarkably true. In addition to the singles, six matches were played in the tournament for the eastern championship in doubles.

The feature matches of the day were the two which brought the sport to a close this afternoon. B. B. Dewhurst of Philadelphia caught N. W. Niles, the Harvard champion off his game and won three sets to one, while Kari E. Behr, the Yake expert, put out T. R. Bell, ir., of New York. R. Hooker of Springfield had one of the easiest matches of the day with A. I. Hoskins of Philadelphia, while I. C. Wright, the Canadlan champion, had no difficulty in putting out S. F. Wise in straight sets.

The canvas men take so much time for taking up and putting down the tent; the grooms work on the horses and the ring and property men have certain hours for their work. Each gang of men is under a boss and the group of bosses are under a head boss. The entire business of conducting this big circus is as systematic as the executive work of the government.

Two Performances Today. The big circus will exhibit here today, giving two performances, afternoon and night. For the accommodation of the public Ringling Brothers will open a downstore, where tickets may be bought at exactly the same prices charged in the ticket wagons on the show grounds. The street car company will make every effort to handle the big crowd without delay or onfusion. The parade, for which Ringling Brothers are distinguished, will start from the show grounds, Twentieth and Paul streets, at 10 o'clock this morning. Three hundred and seventy-five performers are concerned in the huge program that Ringling Brothers' circus is without qualification "the world's greatest show." Most of thees artists are appearing in America for the first time. Not only the best in circus value is woven into the list of 100acts, but the best in farce comedy, comic opera, pantomime, minstrelsy, vaudeville and spectacle. Forty elephants and 100 cages and lairs of the rarest wild animals occupy the menagerie tent. Three hundred dancing girls are a striking feature of the opening spectatcle. The costuming of this production is extravagant and beautiful. The whole circus in its personnel, menagerie features, exclusive circus acts, excellent music, smart dressing, beautiful horses and general quality and condition of things is unique and worthy of unreserved praise. The highest expression of the circus idea is undoubtedly that given by the successful Ringling Brothers.

The Twenty-fifth United States infantry, a colored regiment, passed through Omain yesterday en route from Fort Niohrara to Fort Bilss. The musical occasion was impromptu and was thoroughly enjoyable and a rare and unexpected treat to all present.
