GIRLS SURE OF WHITTAKER

Stable Employee Arrested on Charge of Assaulting Saltzman Girl.

INDIAN WOMAN ALSO IDENTIFIES MAN

Whittaker Denies His Guilt, but Says He Had Been Drinking All Day Friday with Two Strangers.

S. C. Whittaker, employed at the DeWitt livery barn on North Second street, was arrested yesterday morning by the police and positively identified as the man who enticed little 10-year-old Anna Saltzman on Friday evening to accompany him along the tracks of the Northwestern railroad, when he mistreated her, but was fortunately prevented from carrying out his design on the child.

The arrest of Whittaker was brought about through Patrolman Gallagher of the day force. Friday afternoon the officer's attention was called to Whittaker by a little girl, who told him that Whittaker had offered her 10 cents to buy candy with if she would go for a walk with him. The officer questioned Whittaker, but the latter denied any wrong intent and pulling out a photograph of two little girls from his pocket said: "Why man, I have little daughters of my own, and there is surely nothing wrong in my giving a dime to one to buy candy with."

When given the description of little Anna Saltzman's assailant yesterday morning on reporting a police headquarters, Officer Gallagher at once surmised that the fellow who had offered the little girl the dime and the one who had attacked the Saltzman child were the same.

Detective Weir had no difficulty in locating the man described by Officer Gallagher. Whittaker, as he said, his name was, was found sitting in front of the Neumayer barn, which is across the street from the DeWitt barn. He was taken to police headquarters, where later he was positively identified by the Saltzman girl, and little Mabel Humbert. The identification was made complete by Allen Astora, a half-breed Indian, who had seen the man leading the two children north on Eleventh street Friday evening, and who had been picked up and detained over night as a witness by the police.

When arraigned in police court Whittaker denied the charge, but asked for a continuance until Monday to secure an attorney, which was granted. An information charging him with attempted criminal assault was filed against him in the city courts at 10.00. He was committed to the county jail for safe keeping.

Whittaker said he recently arrived from Chamberlain, S. D., where he had been working in a livery barn. He said he had been living with his brother-in-law, George Duckworth, on I street in South Omaha. He said he had been drinking all Friday with two men named Jack Murphy and Jim Donnell, who were strangers to him and that he was intoxicated.

The police learned that Whittaker had worked but a few days at the DeWitt barn and had been discharged Friday. When at the barn yesterday morning he tore up the straw that he was wearing Friday evening and tried to hide it under the manure pile, where the officers found it.

MCGOWAN RESUMES HIS JOURNEY

Goes to Join Relatives After Three Years.

Daniel McGowan, the aged Irishman who after three years' detention in St. Bernard's hospital has regained his mental faculties, was yesterday sent rejoicing on his way to San Francisco, where he has a sister and nephew. Three years ago McGowan left his home in Dublin, Ireland, with the intention of joining his relatives in California. At Philadelphia he lost or was robbed of his baggage and this preyed on his mind. By the time he reached Council Bluffs he had become insane and was taken off the train and placed in St. Bernard's hospital. His condition at the time was such that he did not even know his own name, and for a time nothing could be learned about him. Finally his identity was disclosed from tracing the ticket, which he had in his possession. The railroad company a few days ago issued a return ticket in place of the old one from this city to San Francisco. With a basket of lunch and some money for expenses on the road the old man was placed by H. V. Hatley, clerk of the district court, and clerk of the Board of Commissioners for the insane, on the train yesterday afternoon. With the tears streaming from his eyes the old man, whose hair has become snow white during his three years in the hospital, exclaimed as he shook hands with Mr. Hatley, "God bless you for what you have done for me. I feel like as if I had been from the dead."

Father Objects to Marriage.

H. V. Batley, clerk of the district court, received a letter yesterday from Rev. J. L. Martin, pastor of the Congregational church at Moorhead, Ia., instructing him under no circumstances to issue a marriage license to his son John, who is only 17 years of age, but has formed an affection for a young woman named Mabel Taylor. Rev. Mr. Martin enclosed in his letter a description of the youth also a photograph of the girl, which he said he had secured in the town of Moorhead, Ia., where he wanted to purchase a key. This necessitated Mr. Taylor going to the other end of the large building on the corner of his customer, the other fellow proceeded to rifle a case containing a large number of high grade pocket knives. Mr. Tysack heard the fellow opening the case and, suspecting something was wrong, started to investigate. As he started toward the counter the fellow who had asked for the key knocked him down with a well directed blow on the jaw. Before he could regain his feet the two fellows made a dash for the door and when last seen were running west on 16th street. The police were a once notified, but without results. About two dozen pocket knives were found to be missing. Both of the young fellows were well dressed, wore straw hats and one carried a silver handled umbrella.

LEGAL TANGLE OVER CARNIVAL.

E. A. Troutman Brings Suit for an Accounting.

E. A. Troutman began suit in the district court yesterday against the Council Bluffs Street Fair and Carnival company, of which he was formerly secretary, asking for an accounting of the club's assets, as well as the distribution of about $15,000 which H. H. Van Brunt, president of the company, is alleged to have in his possession in money or stock as trustee.

Troutman up to a few months ago was secretary of the Council Bluffs Elks' lodge and president of the club, as well as being secretary of the carnival company. The incorporators of which are all members of the lodge.

In the suit filed yesterday H. H. Van Brunt, H. A. Searle, H. A. Quinn, W. A. Maurer, Victor Bender, B. L. Sargent, Emmet Tinley, the incorporators and officers of the carnival company, are named as defendants.

In his petition Troutman recites that the company was organized in 1904 for the purpose of holding street fairs and carnivals. The profits from which were to be devoted to the use and benefit of the Council Bluffs lodge of Elks. That this was the case is well known. The Elks' grand lodge prohibited subordinate lodges conducting street fairs and carnivals or deriving any profit directly or indirectly from the same. In consequence, following the first street fair and carnival in this city, which was given directly under the auspices of the local Elks' lodge.

The profits from the last two street fairs were invested at the meeting of the carnival company in the Elk club house building stock with the intention of turning the stock over to the lodge. This, however, has not yet been done as there is a grave question whether under the ruling of the grand lodge the Council Bluffs lodge can accept it. Consequently the stock purchased from the profits of the street fairs still remains in the hands of H. H. Van Brunt, president of the carnival company, as trustee.

Troutman, as the basis for his suit, asserts that the company has never complied with the statutory provisions governing the formation or management of corporations and that the alleged incorporation has never been in existence. In fact he asserts that all the business of the company has been done as a partnership in which each member, including himself, had an equal share. After reciting the law of the Elks grand lodge prohibiting subordinate lodges from being interested in street fairs and carnivals he asserts that H. H. Van Brunt, as trustee, is holding about $15,000 in money and stock.

He complains that in June of the present year the company held a meeting without his knowledge and formed a new corporation of which he is not a member and is conducting the same under the auspices of the Commercial club.

Friends of Mr. Troutman state that he is not bringing the suit for any purpose of financial gain but with the intention of compelling the officers to turn over the profits where it was intended they should be, namely the Elks' lodge. The articles of the Council Bluffs Street Fair and Carnival company provide that the incorporators thereof shall not derive any pecuniary benefit from the management of business of the incorporation.

It is stated that at the meeting of the Council Bluffs lodge of Elks last Friday evening the officers of the Carnival company tendered the lodge $12,000 in stock of the club house building but that Exalted Ruler E. H. Walters informed them that under the ruling of the grand lodge, the Council Bluffs lodge had no right to accept the stock and so the matter rests.

Three Unhappy Couples.

Mr. May A. Kline has brought suit in the district court for divorce from Daniel Kline, to whom she was married in Cincinnati, O., in October, 1904. The husband is at present a resident of Alta, Ia. Mrs. Kline makes statutory charges and accuses her husband of treating her in a cruel and inhuman manner. Besides the divorce she asks that he be given one-half of their property, consisting of 150 acres in Oliver county, North Dakota, and a house and lot in South Sioux City, Neb., in addition to $2,000 alimony and the household furniture in their former home in Alta, which she asserts belongs to her.

Mrs. Martha M. McGill seeks a divorce from William McGill, to whom she was married in December, 1876, in Cambridge, N. Y. She charges her husband with deserting her in March, 1904.

Mrs. Mae Mayberry, against whom her husband, John L. Mayberry, recently brought suit for divorce, making statutory charges, has filed an answer and a petition asking that she be granted the decree of divorce in place of her husband and also that her maiden name of Mae Morgan be restored to her. Mrs. Mayberry denies the charges made by her husband and asserts that he knows them to be false, while on the other hand she accuses him of being anything but a faithful husband.

VIENNA POLICE ARE CORRUPT

Great Interest Created in Newspaper Revelations of Conditions in Austrian Capital.

VIENNA, Aug. 4.—(Special Cablegram to The Bee.)—The sensational revelations of the Illustriertes Wiener Extrablatt regarding the corruption in the Viennese police are creating great interest. The story is almost incredible, but the newspaper declares that it is prepared to prove its statements.

The Extrablatt has made allegations regarding certain alleged dressmaking establishments and the terrible treatment which white girls submit to every day. The mother who informed the Extrablatt, and thus raised the outcry, was able to see her daughter, but only in the presence of several other persons. In these circumstances the girl dared not complain, but a few days later she secured the services of a new servant, who had a letter to the mother. The mother complained, but without avail, and the assertion is that the police protect such places.

DUBLIN, Aug. 4.—(Special Cablegram to The Bee.)—At the celebration in Belfast of the battle of the Boyne Mr. W. H. Lyons proposed the following resolution, which was adopted, and which shows that the Ulster Orangemen are not as yet satisfied with the present liberal government:

"That we declare once more our settled determination to maintain the integrity of the legislative union and to oppose all attempts at disruption, whether directly by a measure of home rule or indirectly by any scheme of devolution. We regard the present government as having neither claimed nor received any mandate from the country in favor of home rule, as hostile to the Union government, and we express our indignation upon all unionists the urgent need of complete organization to counteract the present government, and to secure to and secretly in alliance with the enemies of our country."

SURGERY FOR KANAWHA MONK

Plaster Cast on Jacko Comes Off When His Fellow Student Gets Hold.

Bill Flanagan was sitting on the Kanawha's foot's head, waiting to hear the dinner gong. He wondered what had become of Jacko, the companion of his woes and pleasures, and then remembered that Jacko had gone in to see the doctor of the second mate and the quartermaster. While he was wondering a little party marched aboard, and presently Jacko hopped up beside his playmate.

Jacko hopped because one of his legs was in plaster. Some people would have called it Jacko's left foot, for, as Bill knew better, it was a leg, all right, no matter what Mr. Darwin may have thought.

"What's on your leg?" says Flanagan. "Lemur cat's and all as he is, Jacko can tell a good monkey-story. He told Bill about the houses that he had built on the pier, to which he had been carried by Second Mate Chapman and Quartermaster Rush.

"Believe me, Bill," he began, "they would have it all their own way. You see downstairs when they called me or else you'd have seen the struggle I put up. But what can one poor little 9-month-old ring-tailed South American monkey, even if I do belong to one of the oldest families in the late empire, do when four fellow sailors grab him and march away? They've got a couple of scratches to remember me by, though, and I guess they're not looking for the same job again."

"Well, they got me up there to that big place, Bellevue. There was a lot of fussing and a big man they called Holbrook examined my leg. The quartermaster told him the lid of the rope box fell on it. Then a couple of other men in white coats came in, with queer names, Ike Kempf and Milbank, both doctors. They held what they called a consultation over me."

"One of them, I noticed, turned up his nose at treating a monkey, as he called me, and I felt like reminding him who I was, and telling him why they call you Flanagan. But Mr. Rush whispered where we came from and told them I was the son of Henry H. Rogers. They didn't believe it for a minute, but as soon as they found out I was from the Kanawha they showed me the most particular attentions."

"I didn't know what was up; and when they got to feeling with my leg and telling me another that the shoulder bone was broken and would have to be set I got sort of nervous. You would yourself, Bill."

Bill scratched his back meditatively and looked very solemn. "Go on," he said.

"Well, it was no use fighting, though I did my best. They held me down and put some queer sort of a thing over my head that made me dizzy and sick. But it was worth it, Bill. I'd almost like to go through it all over again for what happened then."

Bill Flanagan remembered.

"Well, say, it all came back to me then. I thought I was down there again and running swinging races with you. And all through the air there seemed to be floating the queerest kind of jungle music, not a bit like that in the saloon downstairs. Great peanants, but it was grand! I wonder how they did that to me. I'd go back tonight if I thought they'd do it again. Anyway, they fixed me up without my knowing it, for you can bet two oranges I'd never been there strap me this way if I hadn't been dreaming of home. And when I woke up they carried me down here again, and here I am again, Bill, but tied up like one of those kids we saw aboard after the Fourth."

"What's that thing?" asked Bill, poking at the bandages.

"I don't know, but it feels awful queer. Like as if I had a stone-leg."

"Let's feel it," murmured Bill, and with the help of a sharp tug he laid bare the plaster of paris cast.

"You'd better not keep that on there," he remarked sagely. "I'll make your leg bald."

"Holy cocoanuts, you don't mean that?" queried Jacko anxiously.

"I saw a man like that once. He was in bed with a white thing on his head, and when he took it off he hadn't a hair left."

"Take it off, Bill, take it off! Don't stand there chattering like a man. Pull it off! D'you think I want to have no hair on my leg?"

And between them they pulled off the bandages, stripped off the plaster and left

But he hopped around merrily again, clattering with Bill Flanagan, and rushing up to the second mate every now and then to show him that a monkey, belonging to Henry H. Eye Glasses for Stuttering. Here is another discovery. Eyeglasses are recommended for those who stutter. It is stated that an improvement in the vision brings an improvement in the speech. Perhaps somebody will next find out that an added refinement in the sense of smell will benefit the sense of hearing. At the same time this eyeglass idea may be a good thing, and every young man, for instance, who means to ask the girl he admires into a "m-m-marry m-m-marry" shouldn't fall to secure a pair of eyeglasses, or even two, before putting the fateful question.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.
