CHICAGO MAY LOWER COMMISSION RATE

Local Dealers Talk of Situation and Look for Big Business Buring the Coming Month if Conditions Continue.

"Shall I vote for or against the proposed eduction in commission on the Chicago Board of Trade from & to % cent a This question the Omaha members of the Chicago Board of Trade are trying to decide for themselves, and their conclusion must be reached by next Wednesday, when the vote will be taken. The commission charge has ordinarily been 14 cent, but in March, after a long agitation, it was increased to % cent, and since then there has been a continual fight on the subject, one faction saying the high rate burt business and the other saying the increase in revenue from individual trades more than compensated for the loss in the number of trades.

Local Business Dull.

Some local men say the high rate of commission has hurt business to a degree that the month which has just passed has today. been the dullest August for years. A visit to the offices of the grain commission firms in the Board of Trade building discloses a state of unusual sluggishness in the option market. This condition has coninued two or three weeks, and in fact that. August is not usually an active month in future trading, but this year it has been duller than ever before

Option business on the local exchange is dull as a reflex of conditions in Chicago, although local conditions would prevent it being large in any event until September. The rate of commission on the Omaha exchange is only 4 cent, and all spring many orders were placed on the local floor which came from country traders who formerly dealt in Chicago. If the charge is not reduced next Wednesday in the Windy City, it means there will be a large busiiess in the Omaha pit again in September.

increased range of subjects with which ou statutes now deal. They are becomin largely-too largely, I think-merely administrative and regulative, establishing rules for the direction and control of business activities, drafting lines of separation between that which is and always was permissable and that which shall no longer be so; establishing boards and commissions, and providing for a scrutiny which, more and more, pries into affairs that once were supposed to pertain exclusively to the individual primarily interested.

ume of legislation enacted by the last congress was inspired by a mere wanton lust of power. It had back of it something higher and better than that; an earnest desire to deal with conditions not very well understood and a conviction that the time had come for doing something. I do not close my eyes to the fact that we cannot have a bewildering complexity in all our affairs and at the same time have perfect simplicity in government. But in all this turmoil, the whirl of machinery, governmental and mechanical, the organization of labor and of capital, the throbbins of the very pulse and the strain of it all to brain and to nerve-what has become o the individual man? The development of the state and of the institutions that collectively compose it is steadily proceeding, but how about the units? The danger of today is that the best and most promisi of our youths, 'the expectancy and rose of the fair state,' will be swallowed up, ground up in the wheels of a relentless, insatiable mechanism that neither knows nor cares. What we may do to reconcile individual right and individual freedom with the assured certainty of increasing legislation we must do as lawyers, and still more as American citizens. And out of it all, step by step, we shall go forward-maybe-to better things. But, anyway, we shall go forward." Mr. Peck's address was received with generous applause. The nomination and election of members was then taken up. This was followed by the election of the general counsel, the reports of the secretary, treasurer and the executive committee.
