"The Charity Ball' and "The Cow Boy and the Lady" are quite a ways apart in both the literary and the dramatic scale. Each is a good play of its kind, though. The successful production of both by one company calls for a display of versatility that is only asked of a well-balanced and capable stock company. That the organization at the Burwood is able to achieve the feat at all is a fact in its favor.

Generally, the piece is well rendered, Mr. Fitch knows of the cow boy and the life of the west chiefly by hearsay, so he didn't hesitate to violate conditions in his the way of the actor which are at times almost insurmountable. Even to the very last he sustains the effort. Miss Elliott finds in Mrs. Weston a chance to show her capacity for the mingling of emotions. It is a constant play and flicker of light and shade, a turning from grave to gay, from pleasant fun to serious talk, all in kaleidoscopic combination, so that a differentiation seems out of the question. Careful study and a dedemination to do has enabled Miss Elliott to conquer this role, and her performance is excellent.

Dr. R. L. Wheeler Delivers Sermon for Organized Labor Men.

HONOR ON THE BHOW OF THE WORKER

Takes Oceasion to Pronounce Eulogy on Edward Bosewater as Champlon of the Common People.

Dr. R. L. Wheeler's Labor day sermon met the approval of the representatives of labor organizations who were present to hear him. He chose as his text a portion of I Kings, v, in which is recorded the terms of one of the earliest contracts of human history.

"King Solomon there contracted with Hiram of Siden for the skilled labor of the Sidonians in the construction of his wonderful temple," said Dr. Wheeler. "In the text there is mention of the advantages of skilled artisans and the necessity of paying them greater wages. By that contract wages were paid according to the household, and by the entire chapter it was seen that Hiram and his people were well pleased with the terms. Solomon, in his day the wisest and the richest man, recognized the labor problem and mastered it by a full appreciation of his duty, representing as he did the amassed wealth of the world. Hiram, on the other hand, was an ideal leader of the forces of labor willing to accept a fair proposition and just remuneration. In the entire history of the building of the temple, seven years, no mention is made of any dissatisfaction or breech of faith."

The minister likened the temple to the American republic, or the temple of liberty, and thence proceeded to a brief discussion of the questions involved in labor problems of today. He declared that the bare cost of food for the average laborer and his family is $450 per year, and the minimum of necessities averaged $850, or about $2.85 per day. This was the actual need and accounted for none of the advantages of education or recreation. Here then was a great question to be righted, for everyone knows that most laborers receive less than the minimum of $850 per year.

The pastor pronounced a woe on the country which crowds its laborers down to the mere necessities until they came to their homes at night like an ox to its stall, and a woe on the people who allowed their laborers to be pushed to the wall and crucified there. He said:

"There is a time when the workingman should strike, and strike hard or be less than a man. Strikes, however, are always makes it seem child's play to toss a full deplorable, often most cruel. They have been terrible in the past and may be again. Out of the struggle of labor, its errors and its crudities, its great mistakes and violence; like the spirit of old John Brown rise a spirit which will light the torch of freedom not alone to the south and the jected by a new machine which excels black horror of the slave, but to the world of toil and the home of the workingman." At the close of his discourse Dr. Wheeler took time to pronounce a brilliant and touching eulogy to the memory of Edward Rosewater, touching on the first meeting thirty-four years ago. He named him a the thrills up and down the backbone of champion of the common people whose the average audience has been demou- name and memory would be higher a genstrated time after time.
