pleasure to those fortunate enough to witness his new drama. In its presentation for the first time at the Boyd last night the audience, fair sized, gave unmistakable evidence of its approval of the author-star, as to his conception, denouement and performance. Mr. Clement rises to heights of superb eloquence in speech and manner at several intervals and receives ovation after ovation. His support is excellent, and the play set off with becoming scenic effect, affords an evening of great enjoyment.

There are four acts. The first one presents a scene of a room in the mansion of the governor of Tennessee, Sam Houston. This is in 1828. In this very first act Sam Houston assumes the role of warrior, though not upon a field of battle. It is in the recesses of his own home, battling with the persistent willfulness of a faithless wife, trying to win her love. He fails. She cannot understand his strong attachment for his friends, the Cherokee, and sneers at him when they call upon the Big Chief of Tennessee, nor does he understand her affection for Felix Hutton, the pretender to Houston's title, martial, state and military, throughout his career, until he is summarily dismissed as a general in the army of Texas by the rugged president of that young but precocious republic.
