HOW TO WRITE A WANT AD Some Advice on a Point that

Will Interest Many When Mother Eve tasted of the apple and felt she could recommend it to the The case of Oliver Jacobson against Leo-id Doll, in which Jacobson is suing for rest of the world-she advertised the fact. The advertising was necessarily done verbally, but then the number to be reached was limited and it sufficed.

The case of Oliver Jacobson against Leo-pold Doll, in which Jacobson is suing for $12,575 for alleged malicious prosecution, is heing heard in Judge Redick's court room. The two men had rival claims to a piece of ground. Jacobson was in actual posses-sion and, it is assorted, threatened to shoot Doll if he came upon the place. Doll had him arrested on a peace warrant, but Ja-cobson was discharged. He assorts there was no busis for the prosecution. Because John D. Richardson failed to show up in court to plead guility and re-ceive a sentonce a capitas has been issued for his arrest by Judge Sutton. Richardson was charged with breaking into the barr of J. W. Kanätsher, 1328 Georgia arenue, and stealing clothing valued at $44. His partner in the orime has already pleaded guility and received a sentence and Rich-ardson was ordered to show up Tuesday. As be had not appeared by Friday morning the sheriq was sent out to find him. The world has grown since then, and with it has come the new ways and means of making our wishes known. The want ad has been developed until it has become a necessity to the business world. If you attempted today to make your wants known by tongue alone you would make alow progress. Suppose you wanted an office hoy or bookkeeper, or your wife wanted a reliable cook-would you go out

If your wife wanted a cook, would you hang a card in the front window, hoping that some cook who had been released from her opercus duties by one of your neighbors might pass. And yet that's what many business men do-hang a badly printed pasteboard card in their front window-sometimes a poorly spelled one, and go ahead doing the office boy's work themselves, or take a clerk away from work three times more valuable, until the boy wanders by sees the size, and store.
(H. W.)-Bookkeeper and cashier, by large westers mercantile house; business rapidly increasing; opportunity for adbity, integrity and willing to work at all times for employer's interest; reasonable subject to insure reply. Address ----from her operous duties by one of your boy wanders by, sees the sign, and stops to inquire whether you offer more money and shorter hours than he now enjoys. And right here we bump into the question of the results. Assuming that a man may succeed in hiring help through office window placards. Does he secure the best in the market? Assuredly not, because the best of help do not walk the streets looking for chance jobs, the best class of help are not seeking changes promiscuously. Besides, the possible number of people reached is extremely small, contingent entirely on location. If a business man can afford to pay big rent for a location on a busy thoroughfare he can not afford to mark himself "cheap" by hanging help want placards in his window. His window space is worth more for other purposes. If he is in an out-of-the-way place, as mills and factories generally are.

few, very few people will see his sign of distress. Right here is where the newspaper "want ad" comes to his assistance and proves its worth.

The first consideration is what to say and how to say it. Don't make the mistake of being too brief. If you want a man to take care of your books, possibly to handle your cash-a man who must have ability, integrity and industry to make valuable to you-don't squeeze himself your ad. down to the minimum size he cause you can get it for 29 cents. If your ad. reads:

HELP WANTED-Bookkeeper. Address it will bring you answers. Yes, but have

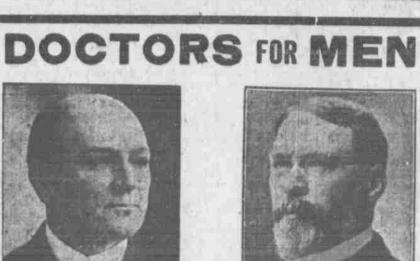

It may cost a few cents more, but will reach the man you want. If you were writing a letter to a prospective employe, one whom you really wanted to secure, you'd make it pretty plain just what inducements you could offer to the right man, wouldn't you? Just remember that you are sending a letter through the want ad., to not alone one man, but to thousands, and you want to make it so plain and so alluring that the best men will want the position.
