AUSTRALIAN IDEAS Mental Illumination from the Antipodes Designed to Work Some

Civic Good. unything if not for originality. Ideas seem as numerous there as bushrangers were a few decades ago. The most gratifying feature about these mental illuminations is the fact that they are all designed to work some civic good. That we imported the ballot system now in use from the antipodean commonwealth is evidence of thir. We have been asked to investigate other innovations in King Edward's South thing has been lacking.

A mevement has just been launched by subject of inquiry from this country to the end that public relief work might be simplified. A year and a half ago a royal ommission was appointed by the Austra-Han government to investigate the workings of an old age pension law in two or three of the provinces of the empire. The commission has just reported, and it unan-imously recommends that the government

In New South Wales there are now 22,000

pensioners receiving from the state $3,540.

ensioners receiving $1,025,600, with the cost administration $8,500. In New Zealand the proportion is about the same as in Victoria. The commission has made a the conditions governing them and advises of 65, or in case of total disability, from 60, the payments to be made every two will average from 15 to 25 per cent of those persons above the stipulated age. Magis cations for pensions and no pension will be granted where the income equals or exceeds $250 a year. A rule has been devised whereby the pension will be decreased in the exact ratio of the increase of income from other sources. All the pensions are forfeitable if the recipient proves to be of dissolute or intemperate habits.

It is improbable that the average cost of naintaining the indigent in the United States reaches the sum of $150 per capita when only the inmates of state and municipal electnosynary institutions are comsmall proportion when compared with the aged and infirm who are supported in whole or in part by various private charitable organizations. It could only be learned after careful study whether the Australian system could be adopted with any degree of success in this country.
