Eather Sumner Damon, who died at the age of $3 at her home in Plymouth Union. Vt., last week, is believed to have been the last surviving widow of a soldier of the American revolution. At all events, she was the last known to the pension office at Washington.

Noah Damon, then a boy of 15, took up arms for his country on April 19, 1775, the day on which "the embattled farmers stood" on Lexington Green and at Concord bridge and "fired the shot heard round the world." Hence he may have been one of the Middlesex plow lads who chased the British redcoats back into Boston town.

Noah Damon served as a private soldier imong the Massachusetts troops at various periods from that time until May 11, 1750. In his old age-at 15-Noah Damon took to wife Esther Summer, then a girl of 21, who lived to be the aged woman who has just died.

There may be cynical comments on the notives of a woman of 21 in wedding a man of 75. Their impropriety in this case may be inferred from the observable fact that Esther Sumner was faithful to the memory of the aged husband of her youth. Daniel F. Bakeman, the last known suring soldier of the revolution, died at Freedom, N. T., in 1809, aged 100 years. There were known to be, at the beginning of this year, four surviving daughters of revolutionary soldiers, the youngest of them St. There are probably others, and possibly some sons.

But these children of their later years could not have known the men who felt this nation's birth pange as did their wives, especially those who were born. as Esther Sumner was, in the midst of the second struggle that vindicated the republic's independence. What she saw and whom she knew intimately is what makes the death Eather Summer Damon an event of na-tional interest. With the men of 1776 she was the last surviving human link .- Chlcago Inter Ocean.
