Several unsuccessful attempts have been made to revive public interest in Mr. Barnaby but his days of activity on the stage have ended and his remaining years can only be releved from the pangs of penury through public generosity.

INTRE Musical Couries of Neven the Lieuter tells some good stories of Mr. Simms, which are well worth repeating. Mr. Simms has a lion for real humor. His friends are little girl so cast of the strands of the strands of the nevitable in this seem the new to the inevitable in this seem introduced. This is the entrance of King Neptune and twenty-four mormalds through ten feet of water in the center of the 1 come tank, and their descent through the water at the end of the second scene. The mechanical devices by which this feat is accomplished was invented by H. L. Bowdoin, a New York civil engineer. The story which is based upon this invention was written by Manuel Kiein and Edward P. Temple, with music by Mr. a.ein. "Neptune's Daughter." is in three scenes, the first showing the coast of Brittainy, with a shipwreck, in which a little girl is cast up by the sea and named "Noptune's Daughter." The second scene shows this girl, eighteen years of Brittainy, with a shipwreck, in which a little girl is cast up by the sea and named "Noptune's Daughter." The second scene shows this girl, eighteen years of Brittainy. When she has parted through pique. The ond scene shows this girl, eighteen years later, betrothed to a handsome sailor, from whom she has parted through pique. The disconsolate sailor, wandering by the sea, is enticed by a band of mermaids to follow them into the ocean and sinks from sight beneath the waves. The Hippodrome tank of water represents the sea. Annette, as the little girl is named, is taken by King Neptune into his barge to search for her lost lover, and she, too, sinks beneath the waves with Neptune and his mermaids. The third and closing scene is a bewildering panorama representing the court of King Neptune, where the lovers are reunited and their marriage celebrated by a ballet, "Under the Sea." The cast of principals to be seen in "Neptune's Daughter" includes Miss Marie Louise Gribbon, Miss Rose La Harte, Miss Margaret Townsend, W. Hutchinson Clark, Edwin A. Clark, John G. Sparks, J. Parker Coombs; Marceline, the clown, and an ensemble of over 500 people. "Meeting him one day the choirmaster MacDowell fund. Since then Mr. Landow has demonstrated his mastership by a series of successful concerts in Berlin, Leipsic and Munich.

Besides a perfectly echooled technic equal to the demands of our modern times, Mr. Landow distinguishes himself in the reproduction of the most famous works of our great composers by his soulful delivery and a comprehensive eloquence of the intellectual contents of these tone poems. He gives life and beauty to these compositions by means of an unusually warm, soft and variated touch.
