The ordinance defines the need for a crossing and the defendant proted the room which they occupied as man and wife under the name of Morris; Dr. V. L. Treynor, coronen and Undertaker Lewis Cutler. Dr Treynor and Mr. Cutler will be recalled this morning for further cross-examination. The testimony of Mr. and Mra. Joehrendt was substantially the same. They told of how shortly before midnight of October 315, Miss Ripke, who, was known to them us Mrs. Morris, came to their said such a crossing as proposed by the The hearing in the nutter of the application of Porlawhramte county to require the Portland Gold Mining Company to produce all DI its books and records for evidence by the county in its suits to Mr. Jochrendt told of going into the room, occupied by Potts and the young woman and turning on the light. He described the position of Potts in the bed and stated that he was breathing heavily. Mr. Joshrendt then telephoned for Doctor Smith Bellinger and returned to the room where Potts lay, until the arrival of the doctor. Potts, he said, was lying slightly on his right side with the coverlid pulled ut under his chin and his left arm outside the covering. Miss Ripke, he said, appeared somewhat neryour, but not what he would call excited.

Saw Revolver. Mrs. Joshrendt, in her story of the of the night that Potts was shot, told of how the young woman stayed in their apartments all night and refused to return to her own room. She told of ow, when the doctor questioned Miss Northwestern tracks. Ripke, the latter told him that her husband had had beart trouble and that his father had died the same way. The witness identified the revolver which was found by H. B. Rusell, the employe of Undertaker Cufler, near the bed where the dead man lay, as one she had seen on the bureau in the room-occupied by "Mr. and Mrs. Morris." Her sttention had been called to the revolver by the young woman, who, a few days before the tragedy had asked her if she had seen it in her bureau drawer. The witness said that she fold the young woman that she had not, as she had not looked into the bureau. The next pag she noiced the weapon on the top of the bureau.
